Meteor explosion rocks Russia

■ More than 1,000 injured, most from flying glass

By Jim Heintz
and Vladimir Isachenkov
Associated Press

MOSCOW — With a blinding flash and a booming shock wave, a meteor blazed across the western Siberian sky Friday and exploded with the force of 20 atomic bombs, injuring more than 1,000 people as it blasted out windows and spread panic in a city of 1 million.

While NASA estimated the meteor was only about the size of a bus and weighed an estimated 7,000 tons, the fireball it produced was dramatic. Video shot by startled residents of the city of Chelyabinsk showed its streaming contrails as it arced toward the horizon just after sunrise, looking like something from a world-ending science-fiction movie.

The largest recorded meteor strike in more than a century occurred hours before a 150-foot asteroid passed within about 17,000 miles (28,000 kilometers) of Earth. The European Space Agency said its experts had determined there was no connection between the asteroid and the Russian meteor — just cosmic coincidence.

The meteor above western Siberia entered the Earth's atmosphere about 9:20 a.m. local time (10:20 p.m. EST Thursday) at a hypersonic speed of at least 33,000 mph (54,000 kph) and shattered into pieces about 30-50 kilometers (18 to 32 miles) high, the Russian Academy of Sciences said. NASA estimated its speed at about 40,000 mph, said it exploded about 12 to 15 miles high, released 300 to 500 kilotons of energy and left a trail 300 miles long.

"There was panic. People had no idea what was happening," said Sergey Hametov of Chelyabinsk, about 1,500 kilometers (930 miles) east of Moscow in the Ural Mountains.

"We saw a big burst of light, then went outside to see what it was and we heard a really loud, thundering sound," he told The Associated Press by telephone.

The shock wave blew in an estimated 100,000 square meters (more than 1 million square feet)

Stumbo proposes pension remedies

■ Taxing Instant Racing proceeds tops list of plans

The Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Horse racing tracks could generate up to $30 million a year in tax revenue for the state's financially troubled pension system if they installed slot-like machines and then taxed the proceeds, the House Speaker said Friday.

In Kentucky, actual slot machines are banned, but two horse tracks — including Henderson County's Ellis Park — have installed similar "Instant Racing" machines that allow people to wager on the outcomes of past horse races.

House Speaker Greg Stumbo, D-Prestonsburg, said he believes Instant Racing could generate wagers totaling $1 billion a year if expanded to additional tracks. Taxing those wages could be a boon to the pension system.

Stumbo told reporters that Instant Racing would be part of one proposal to fund pensions. The Democratic caucus will consider three or four proposals next week. Stumbo also has suggested raising the state's cigarette tax from 60 cents to $1 a pack in a move he said could generate $100 million a year for

Boyhood dreams inspiration for singer

■ 'Ladysmith' at HFAC Tuesday

Gleaner staff

In the early 1960s, a young farm boy turned factory worker in South Africa had a series of dreams in which he heard the unique musical sounds of the Zulu people.

That inspired him to form an a cappella singing group made up of brothers and cousins to create the traditional isicathamiya harmonies developed in the mines of South Africa.

Fifty years later, Ladysmith Black Mambazo led by founder Joseph Shabalala is still going strong, and has married the intricate rhythms and harmonies of their native South Africa to the sound of Christian gospel music for a worldwide audience.

On Tuesday they will bring their music to Henderson Fine Arts Center for an event in the Henderson Area Arts Alliance's performing arts season.

The meaning of the name: "Ladysmith" is the name of Shabalala's rural hometown, "black" refers to oxen (the strongest of farm animals) and "mambazo" is the Zulu word for ax, which is a symbol of the group's ability to "chop down" any singing rival who might challenge them.

There was a time, in fact, that the group was banned from isicathamiya singing competitions because of their extremely polished and tight harmonies, but they were allowed to perform in exhibition.

Gay ban on prom disrupting small town

By Pamela Engel
Associated Press

SULLIVAN, Ind. — A small Indiana community best known for its parks and corn festival has become the center of a national discussion about intolerance over a group's plans to host a "traditional" prom that bans gay students.

Residents and officials in Sullivan, a city of about 4,200 near the Illinois border, are scrambling to escape the uncomfortable spotlight cast when a teacher supporting the "traditional" prom for Sullivan High School said she believes people choose to be gay and that gays have no purpose in life.

"I just ... I don't understand it," Diana Medley, referring to gays, told Terre Haute television station WTWO.

The comments by Medley, a special education teacher in a neighboring school district, have gone viral and sparked online campaigns to have her fired. A petition on Change.org calling for her dismissal had generated more than 17,500 signatures from as far away as the United Kingdom as of Thursday, and a Facebook page supporting a prom

‘Underdog’ co-creator dies at 85

BOSTON (AP) — William Watts Biggers, the co-creator of the cartoon “Underdog,” the mild-mannered canine shoeshine boy who turned into a caped superhero to rescue his girlfriend, Sweet Polly Purebred, has died. He was 85.

Family friend Derek Tague says Biggers, who went by “Buck,” died unexpectedly at his Plymouth, Mass., home on Sunday.

The native of Avondale Estates, Ga., worked for the New York City advertising firm DFS when he accepted an assignment from the agency’s largest client, General Mills, to create television cartoons to promote its break-fast cereals. The most famous was “Underdog,” which debuted on NBC in 1964.

Biggers’ wife of 39 years, Grace, died in 1989. He is sur-vived by his daughter, Victoria Biggers, his son, W. Watts Biggers, Jr., and longtime companion Nancy Purbeck.

Funeral arrangements will be private.

Passengers form bonds on disabled cruise ship

The Associated Press

MOBILE, Ala. – When their cruise ship lost power, pas-sengers aboard the Carni-val Triumph could have been selfish and looked out only for themselves and their loved ones.

Instead, they became comrades in a long, ex-hausting struggle to get home.

As ship conditions de-teriorated after an engine fire, travelers formed Bi-bble study groups, shared or traded precious sup-plies and even welcomed strangers into their private cabins. Long after they’ve returned to the everyday luxuries of hot showers and cold drinks, passen-gers said, they will remem-ber the crew and the per-sonal bonds formed during a cruel week at sea.

The tired tourists fi-nally reached land Friday and gave a glimpse into the intensely uncomfortable journey they had endured.

Sandy Jackson, of Hous-ton, was fortunate to have an upper-level room with a balcony and a breeze that kept the air in her cabin fresh. Rooms on the lower decks were too foul or sti-ffling, so Jackson took in five people, including four strangers.

“We knew one, the others we’re very good friends with now,” Jack-son said. “Everyone was very cordial in sharing supplies. What you had and they didn’t have, ev-eryone shared as much as possible.”

Brandi Dorsett, of Sweeny, Texas, said people were antsy and irritable at times, and there was ten-sion. But it never got out of hand.

The ship left Galves-ton, Texas, on Feb. 7 for a four-day jaunt to Cozumel, Mexico. The fire paralyzed the ship early Sunday, leaving it adrift in the Gulf of Mexico until tugboats towed the massive 14-story vessel to Mobile. It arrived late Thursday to cheers and flashing cameras. Pas-sengers had to wait several more hours to disembark.

Many of the more than 4,200 people aboard were bused to New Orleans to catch a flight home or to the ship’s home port in Galves-ton. And as if they hadn’t suffered enough, one of the buses broke down during the two-hour ride to New Orleans. Passengers on a different bus reported los-ing their luggage.

But that was nothing compared to life on the crippled cruise liner. To pass time, Joseph Alvarez said about 45 people gath-ered in a public room on the lower deck for Bible study.

“It was awesome,” he said. “It lifted up our souls and gave us hope that we would get back.”

Fort Campbell widows receive mortgage-free homes

■ Bank, national charity responsible for donations

By Kristin M. Hall
Associated Press

NASHVILLE — The widows of three Fort Campbell soldiers who were killed in Afghanistan received mortgage-free homes in Tennessee on Friday from Bank of America and Homes for Our Troops.

The wives of Army Spc. Charles “Scott” Jirtle, Army Spc. Blaine Redding and Army Spc. Anthony Vargas were presented with ceremonial keys to their homes in front of a crowd of supporters who had come to Nashville from the post on the Tennessee-Kentucky state line.

The donation of the homes was a reflection of the support from the military community around Fort Campbell for these families, who are referred to within the military as “Gold Star Families.”

All three soldiers were assigned to units in the 101st Airborne Division. Some of the division’s top leaders were in attendance, including the deputy commanding general for support, Brig. Gen. Ronald F Lewis.

Jirtle, 29, and Redding, 22, were killed after their vehicle was hit with an improvised explosive device on June 7, 2010, in Konar, Afghanistan. They were assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 327th Infantry Regiment, 1st Brigade Combat Team.

Vargas, 27, died Nov. 8, 2010, in Nangarhar province, Afghanistan, after insurgents attacked his unit using an improvised explosive device. He was assigned to 1st Squadron, 61st Cavalry Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team.

Luisa Vargas, a mother of three children between ages 11 and 4, said the donation of the home lifts a financial burden off her shoulders. Now that she doesn’t have to pay a mortgage, Vargas said she can save money for her children’s college educations.

“I know when my husband joined the Army, a big thing for him was knowing that, God forbid something happened, his family would be taken care of,” she said. “It means so much to know that my kids are always going to be taken care of.”

Soldiers from the installation have been on near-constant deployment rotations since 2001 during the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and thousands of troops from there are currently deployed to Afghanistan. But Vargas said many families who have lost a soldier in the war decide to stay near the post, because they still have friends and support services at Fort Campbell.

“I think for a lot of us, it just feels like home, because it was the last place our husbands and our families were united,” said Vargas, whose home is in Carthage, a short drive from Fort Campbell.

Bank of America has pledged to provide up to 1,000 homes to military families and first responders in 2013. Homes for Our Troops, a national charity, has been providing specially adapted homes for wounded service members since 2004 and has recently expanded its efforts to help widows of fallen troops.

Bat disease found at two state parks

■ White-nose discovered at Carter Cave, Kingdom Come

LOUISVILLE — A disease responsible for killing millions of bats in North America has spread to caves at two state parks in eastern Kentucky that are homes to federally endangered bats, parks officials said Friday.

White-nose syndrome has been detected in caves at Carter Caves State Resort Park and Kingdom Come State Park, said state parks department spokesman Gil Lawson. Small numbers of bats have died so far from the disease, he said.

Caves in caves that are not open to the public. The three caves were closed in 2008 as part of a pre-emptive effort to stop the spread of the fungus causing the disease, Lawson said.

Carter Caves naturalist Coy Ainsley said the discovery was regretful but inevitable given the area’s large number of bats.

“We are not surprised by this,” he said. “We knew it was coming. It was just how long was it going to take to get here.”

The Carter Caves system, near Olive Hill, is home to about 40,000 Indiana bats, which are federally endangered. The majority of those are found in one of the closed-to-the-public caves where the disease was detected, Lawson said.

Haggard headlines bluegrass festival

OWENSBORO — Country Music Hall of Fame member Merle Haggard will be the featured artist in this year’s Bluegrass Roots & Branches Festival in western Kentucky.

The Messenger-Inquirer (<http://bit.ly/X9KaSC>) reports other featured acts scheduled to perform during the three day event in Owensboro include The Del McCoury Band, Doyle Lawson & Quicksilver, the Punch Brothers and Carolina Chocolate Drops.

International Bluegrass Music Museum Director Gabrielle Gray says organizers expect attendance to increase this year since the festival was named “event of the year” last fall by the International Bluegrass Music Association.

She said the festival drew 21,000 people last year — a record number.

“We had more than 10,000 people on the final day last summer,” she said. “And we were at capacity. We ran out of parking.”

Haggard, who has had 40 No. 1 songs since first hitting the charts in the 1960s, recorded his first bluegrass album in 2007.

“He’ll be doing a mix of bluegrass and country,” Gray said.

She says other acts will perform different kinds of music including bluegrass, rock, jazz and Cajun.

“Rather than being a strictly bluegrass festival, it is a festival held strictly in support of the bluegrass museum,” Gray said.

Tickets went on sale this week for the June 27-29 event.

Tolls possible on Ohio bridge

CINCINNATI — Passenger vehicles could be charged $1 to cross a major Ohio River bridge if tolls are used to pay for its replacement.

The Cincinnati Enquirer (<http://cin.ci/12Qwxep>) reports that early results of a study being conducted on the Brent Spence Bridge replacement show toll rates won’t surpass $2 one-way for passenger vehicles.

But there are no guarantees tolls will be as low as $1 or $2.

An Ohio Department of Transportation spokesman says it’s still too soon to say what the toll costs will be.

The study is expected to be completed by the end of March.

The heavily used bridge carries interstate traffic between Kentucky and Ohio over the Ohio River.

The Brent Spence handles more than twice the amount of traffic as was intended when it opened in 1963.

Rockslide closes highway lanes

HAZARD — A rockslide has closed the eastbound lanes of Kentucky 80 near the Knott-Perry county line.

Dispatchers told WKYT-TV that no one was injured when the rockslide occurred Friday morning, but some motorists were left with flat tires.

Westbound lanes of the highway remained open, but lanes heading from Perry into Knott County are closed.

Highway crews were at the scene, but the station reports it is unclear how long the lanes will be blocked.

Kentucky library numbers released

FRANKFORT — The Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives says more 2.5 million people in Kentucky hold library cards, and they checked out almost 20 million books last year from public libraries.

KDLA says in addition, more than nine million audio-visual items were checked out.

The numbers were compiled from 2012 statistics submitted by the state’s 119 public library systems.

Attendance at children’s programs rose 3.5 percent in 2012, setting a record with more than 1.2 million participants.

The state says collections of e-books increased to more than 3 million last year statewide.

Somerset man dies in house fire

SOMERSET — A house fire has killed a man in Somerset.

The Commonwealth-Journal (<http://bit.ly/UmzXT4>) reported 51-year-old Arthur Jackson died shortly after firefighters pulled him through a window of his flaming house on Thursday afternoon.

Parkers Mill Fire Department Chief David Volz said rescuers broke through a wall to reach Jackson in thick, rolling smoke.

Pulaski County Public Safety Director Tiger Robinson said Jackson appeared stable when he was put into an ambulance, but was later pronounced dead at Lake Cumberland Regional Hospital.

Chief Deputy Coroner Anthony Gossett said Jackson probably died from smoke inhalation.

Beshear has follow-up surgery

FRANKFORT — Gov. Steve Beshear’s office has said the minor eye surgery he underwent Thursday is not expected to interrupt his regular schedule.

The successful surgery removed some scar tissue that developed after last November’s outpatient procedure to repair a detached retina. Beshear had his surgery in Lexington in November after he woke up one morning and had trouble seeing out of one eye.

He did not travel for a few days after his surgery in November to recuperate.

More must be done to help mentally ill

I am a citizen concerned about the impact that untreated mental illness is having in violent crimes lately. Laws need to be changed to make commitment for observation more feasible and to have financing made available for facilities with beds to accommodate these troubled souls. The statistics show that at a time of increased violence there has been a decrease in expenditures for mental health.

In Kentucky today a period of only 72 hours is required for observation. By that time the incarcerated one is really agitated. Surely in light of recent events, better intervention methods must be implemented.

A small boy was kidnapped in the South by a person that many in the community deemed disturbed. They only advised people to stay away from the individual in question. Would not it have been better if they had means to require examination of that person?

Think of what might have been prevented if the mother of the deranged young man in Connecticut could have more easily found treatment for her over-18-year-old. Laws there make such action very difficult.

PLEASE! The situation is dire and very unfair to the sick one and to society. Our streets and prisons are populated with many ill people.

Many states have AOT (Assisted Outpatient Treatment) facilities to help patients find treatment and remain on their medications. Staying on medication is the major problem for recovering patients.

The public needs to be better informed and to demand action by our legislators regarding matters of mental health. The Treatment Advocacy Center in Arlington, Va., sends materials giving statistics about treatments and laws in all the states (www.treatmentadvocacycenter.org).

President out to take all our guns

We’ve been here too long to believe that if guns are outlawed we’ll suddenly have a safer America. This is what the president is preaching, get the guns, AR-15s/ AK-47s.

The president is saying he wants a ban on all military style assault weapons, and if that’s where he’d stop, I agree those weapons are designed to kill human beings. That’s it, bottom line.

But once he gets assault weapons taken off the market (a foot in the door so to speak), guarantee, write this down, you’ll be surrendering your shotguns and hunting rifles next and your religious freedoms as well.

Mr. President, why don’t you go after the nut cases and the murderers, and leave honest people alone. Not all gun owners are Lee Harvey Oswald/Adam Lanza types.

I wish it was just a ban on assault weapons, but we know President Obama has the liberal press (spurred on by Newtown, Conn.) solidly behind him in his crusade to take all guns away from all Americans.

God and guns keep America free.

A. Frank O’Nan, Henderson

Right is out of touch on many issues

Gun owners are concerned about the government taking their weapons. Cheer up, the sky is not falling. The Department of Firearms, Alcohol and Tobacco hasn’t even had a director since before Dick Cheney shot his hunting buddy. True, President Obama did recently pick a candidate.

America has half of all the guns in the world. Are we safer than any other country? Any hunter knows you don’t need an automatic weapon to hunt game.

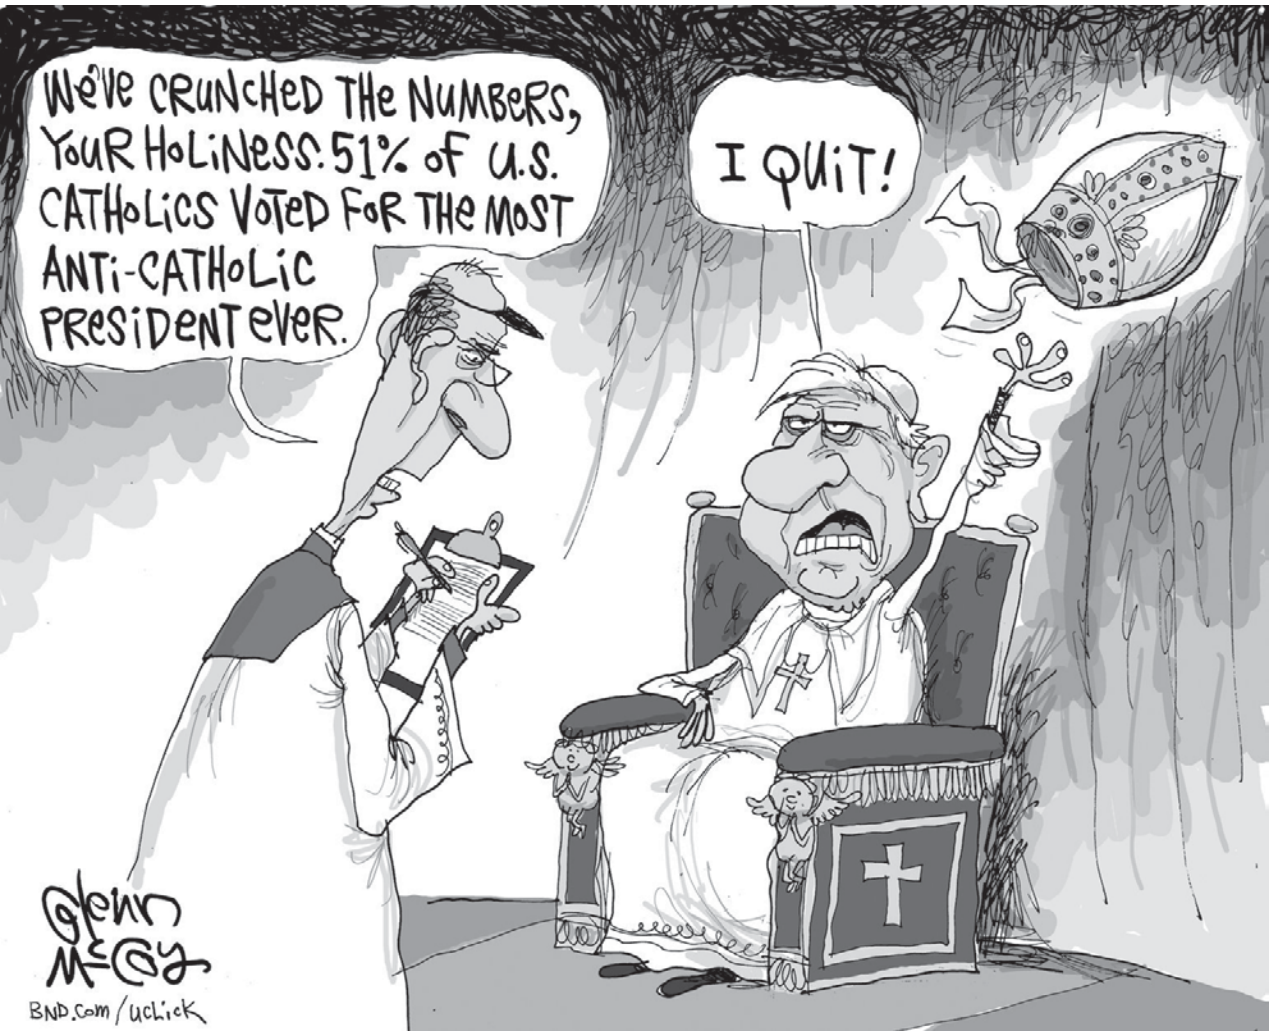

The NRA is just making money from gun manufacturers. Does the gun lobby care about your children or grandchildren? They care about money.

Anyone breaking into my home will take many buckshot to the “happy hunting ground.” Automatic weapons are not needed by me.

Come down to Earth. How many agents would it take to collect more than 300 million weapons? Santa Claus couldn’t do it in 1,000 years.

The GOP wanted to downsize or destroy the Department of Education. Someone may come to appropriate all books. Terrible. Education is the answer to a world of ignorance.

Being a senior citizen I fret about Medicare being put in a voucher system. What about my rheumatoid arthritis getting worse?

Then there is my concern about some nut with an automatic weapon murdering my grandchildren. Those folks in Connecticut will never see the smiles, receive the hugs or enjoy the children massacred by an automatic weapon. That needs to change.

Farmers work hard, have earned respect

I appreciated you printing “God Made a Farmer” in Sunday’s Gleaner.

If a person is not involved in farming or grew up on a farm, they have no clue to what a farmer does. Even though it has changed a lot through the years, it is still a lot of work. Farming like a lot of other vocations has gone “high tech.”

My sons and a grandson are fourth and fifth generation farmers in Union County. Their great- and great-great-grandfathers were farmers in the bottoms in Henderson County.

I am very proud to be their mother and grandmother.

KU helping make sure heating is affordable

With winter in full swing, our community’s most vulnerable citizens can sometimes struggle to pay for essential services like heat and power.

Kentucky Utilities Company partners year-round with nonprofit and community organizations to provide utility bill assistance and weatherization services to help those in need. This support is even more critical during cold weather months. We also encourage customers who have the desire to help those in need to make voluntary contributions to our heating assistance program, the WinterCare Energy Fund.

The WinterCare Energy Fund is a nonprofit organization supported by KU and managed by an independent third party, the Community Action Council.

KU matches customer donations each month and forwards the entire amount to the Community Action Council for distribution in the counties we serve. Through March 31, KU will make contributions go even further by matching customers’ donations $1-for-$1.

Over the last five years, the WinterCare Energy Fund has raised nearly $600,000 to provide utility bill assistance to thousands of area families in need.

The program supports our most vulnerable community members who may be in dire financial situations leaving a family with no heat or the immediate prospect of no heat.

Eligibility is determined by the Community Action Council, and KU plays no part in determining eligibility. KU customers may donate to the program by making a recurring monthly pledge or a one-time contribution that can be added to their monthly bills. Customers can also donate online at www.lge-ku.com after registering their utility account.

The WinterCare Energy Fund has provided assistance to thousands of our community’s most disadvantaged citizens over the years. With your support, we can ensure those in need continue to receive the assistance they need.

The writer is vice president for corporate responsibility and community affairs at Kentucky Utilities Co.

Victory cannot be easily measured

Win some, lose some, be it a Super Bowl or any kind of race or game, or a presidential election or other sundry rages and proposals in politics.

Victory doesn’t always show up on the scoreboard, just as harvest time is not always in October (or whenever it is scheduled to be).

Let’s be certain the victory or harvest is worth the effort. Jesus was not the victor by any earthly measurement, but in eternity the “scoreboard” will show who was and is the ultimate victor.

Republicans’ stupidity is entertaining

There’s been a lot of soul-searching by Republicans since November. Congressional Republicans aren’t what you’d call real popular these days. In a recent survey they ranked right behind colonoscopies and just ahead of meth labs.

I don’t think they will be making any demographic headway for upcoming elections unless “creation scientists” find a way for Hispanic women to give birth to angry old white guys.

When asked about where a Republican Tea Party congressman stood on “the war on women,” he said, “Oh some of my best friends are women. I spent nine months in one, one time.”

As the Louisiana governor said, “The Republican Party needs to stop being the Stupid Party.”

I’d say “Amen to that” except that I don’t know what I would do for my daily comedy fix if they changed.

A.J. Vogel, Henderson

Right must not embrace Paul for president

I saw in a small article in Dec. 15 Gleaner and heard on TV Jan. 15 that Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul may be considering a run for president in 2016 or he may just run for senator again.

Rand Paul is exactly the type of person Republicans should not choose. The Republican Party must move more to the left (for them it will be to the middle) or they may never control the White House again.

Tea Party candidates cannot win on the national level. Some districts and some states, yes (as Paul did in 2010), but not on the national level.

Romney was a moderate conservative far removed from the Tea Party, and he lost.

Rand Paul running for president might be good for our state. We could then replace him with a more mainstream senator who would be best for Kentucky and the nation.

Extremists like Paul are not right for the country.

We need politicians who will compromise across the aisle to solve problems — not become the problem. Remember Indiana nominated a Tea Party man, Murdock, over moderate Republican Dick Lugar and lost the Senate seat to Democrat Donnelly. If Paul does run he should do so as a third-party candidate.

I also understand the Tea Party would like to drop Mitch McConnell in favor of a more right wing radical. Fine — but just remember Indiana, Murdock and Lugar. Dropping McConnell could lead to Kentucky having two Democratic senators.

I imagine Democrats would be salivating at the thought of Rand Paul as Republican nominee in 2016. It would ensure a Democratic victory. Even if Paul and the Tea Party are right for the country, the fact is they cannot win. We have moved too far left and will stay there as that is what the majority of people want.

Face facts — the majority of people want a socialistic style government as Obama’s re-election proved. Nominating ultraconservative candidates will not revert the country to conservatism.

Conservatives may hate Obama and his socialistic policies, but unless Republicans move more toward Obama policies they will become less and less a factor in the future in national elections.

Hagel delay gives his foes time

By Richard Lardner
Associated Press

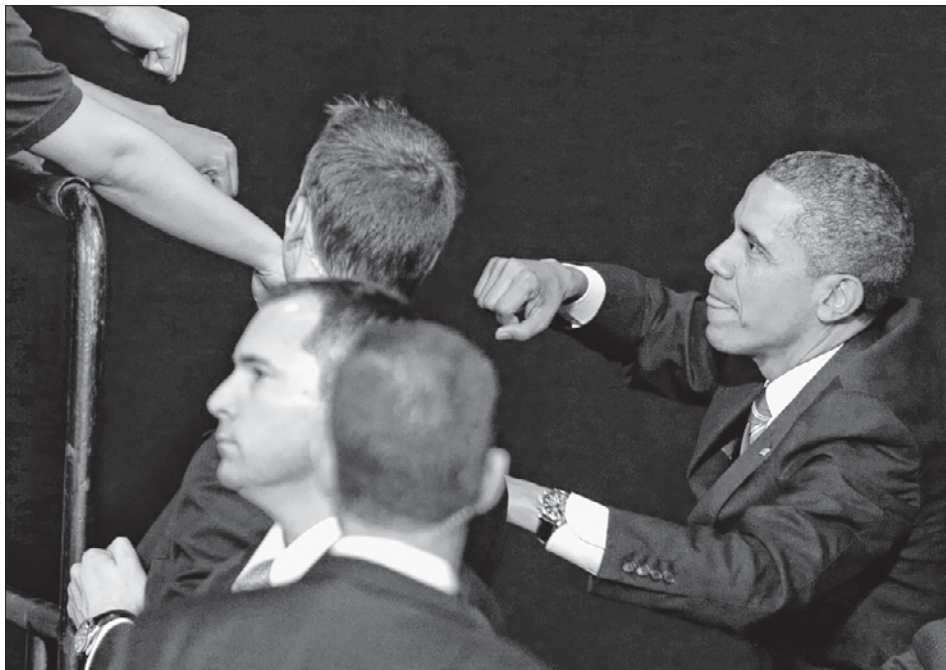

WASHINGTON — The week-long Senate recess gives groups opposed to Chuck Hagel's nomination to become defense secretary more time to sharpen their attack against President Barack Obama's choice. And they're not wasting any of it, promising to redouble their efforts to scour Hagel's record and to pressure senators to vote against him.

While Senate Republicans have succeeded in delaying a confirmation vote on Hagel's nomination, they signaled that they would eventually relent and allow an up-or-down vote after they return from their recess Feb. 25.

But that leaves an uncomfortable gap for Hagel and the White House, which doesn't want any surprises that would further delay or possibly derail his confirmation. But the fuss has underscored a key dynamic: Even if Hagel is confirmed, his relations with House and Senate Republicans could be frostier than the Obama administration might have hoped.

"You need a strong secretary of defense, and I think through this process he's been weakened and it might be better to just go back to the drawing board," House Armed Services Committee Chairman Howard "Buck" McKeon told reporters Friday.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest said Friday that Obama is still confident Hagel will be confirmed.

Obama calls for 'ladder of opportunity' to middle class

■ State of the Union theme reiterated

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Pressing his case in the town that launched his political career, President Barack Obama called Friday for the government to take an active, wide-ranging role in ensuring every American has a "ladder of opportunity" into the middle class.

Speaking at Hyde Park Academy in Chicago, Obama sought support for proposals, unveiled this week in his State of the Union address, to increase the federal minimum wage and ensure every child can attend preschool. He also pitched plans to pair businesses with recession-battered communities to help them rebuild and provide job training.

"In too many neighborhoods today, whether here in Chicago or in the farthest reaches of rural America, it can feel like for a lot of young people the future only extends to the next street corner or the outskirts of town, that no matter how much you work or how hard you try, your destiny was determined the moment you were born," Obama said.

Ensuring that no child is denied the ability to go as far as his or her talents will allow means removing some of the roadblocks from early in life, Obama said, calling for intensified efforts to promote healthier family environments. He called for removing financial disincentives to marry and reforming child support laws in hopes that more children will grow up in stable homes — and, specifically, with a responsible father in the picture.

Holding himself up as an example, Obama reflected on the absence of his father during his childhood, but said he had advantages not enjoyed by others, such as the at-risk young men from an anti-violence school program he met just after arriving in Chicago.

"I had issues, too, when I was their age. I just had an environment that was a little more forgiving. I had more of a safety net," he said.

Obama also pledged to partner with 20 of the country's hardest-hit communities to "get them back in the game." He said his administration would work with local leaders to cut through red tape, targeting neighborhoods pulled down by the weight of violent crime to help reduce crime using methods that have been proven to work.

Jackson Jr. guilty of misusing funds

WASHINGTON — In a spectacular fall from political prominence, former U.S. Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. and his wife agreed Friday to plead guilty to federal charges growing out of what prosecutors said was a scheme to use $750,000 in campaign funds for lavish personal expenses, including a $43,000 gold watch and furs.

Federal prosecutors filed one charge of conspiracy against the former Chicago congressman and charged his ex-alderman wife, Sandra, with one count of filing false joint federal income tax returns for the years 2006-2011 that knowingly understated the income the couple received. Both agreed to plead guilty in plea deals with federal prosecutors.

"I offer no excuses for my conduct, and I fully accept my responsibility for the improper decisions and mistakes I have made," the ex-congressman said in a written statement released by his lawyers. "I want to offer my sincerest apologies ... for my errors in judgment and while my journey is not yet complete, it is my hope that I am remembered for things that I did right."

Published reports said Jackson could face 46 to 57 months in prison under sentencing guidelines, but there was no immediate confirmation of what, if any, sentence he and prosecutors had agreed to recommend to U.S. District Court Judge Reggie Walton, who was assigned the case.

Sequester may make deployments longer

WASHINGTON — Soldiers deployed to Afghanistan next year may see their war tours extended because budget cuts will drastically limit training for brigades to replace them, the top Army general said Friday.

Gen. Raymond Odierno, the Army chief of staff, said the military will be able to fund training and operations for combat units in Afghanistan now and for those deploying in the summer and fall. But he says there will be delays in training for those deploying in 2014.

He said that right now the Army is facing a shortfall of as much as $8 billion in operating funds for Afghanistan, and there could be an additional $5.4 billion in cuts if Congress can't resolve a budget standoff and automatic reductions — called sequester — go into effect.

Obama, Italy's Napolitano meet

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama is greeting outgoing Italian President Giorgio Napolitano, hailing him as a friend and a "visionary" leader and taking the opportunity to thank Italy for its participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and contributions in Afghanistan.

Obama says Napolitano, who ends his seven years in office this spring, has helped guide and steer Europe toward greater unification. Among the topics Obama said the two men would discuss is Obama's plan to pursue U.S.-European Union free trade pact and the formation of a new government in Italy and its implications for Europe.

Napolitano said Italy, which has struggled to shore up its finances and emerge from recession, has made "remarkable progress" in the past 14 months. He says progress "must and will continue."

Rebel fighters, army battling for airport

Intense clashes between the Syrian army and rebel fighters near the country's second-largest airport killed around 150 people in recent days, anti-regime activists said Friday, pointing to the significance both sides in the country's civil war place on controlling key infrastructure.

The battle for the international airport near Aleppo, Syria's largest city, resembles other battles over strategic assets that could provide an edge in the larger fight for the country.

This week, rebels seized a hydroelectric dam and a major oil field, cutting off President Bashar Assad's regime from key resources necessary for its long-term survival. On Friday, activists also reported that rebels seized an air defense base and fought near two other army installations in Syria's north.

Rebels have been trying for months to capture Aleppo's international airport, which lies east of the city in a complex with a smaller military airfield and an army base in charge of protecting the area.

The base, home to the Syrian army's 80th Brigade, fell to rebel forces Wednesday, and fighting has continued over the airports since, with both sides shelling one another's positions.

Tests find horse meat in restaurants

LONDON — Tests have found horse meat in school meals, hospital food and restaurant dishes in Britain, officials said Friday, as the scandal over adulterated meat spread beyond frozen supermarket products. Results were coming in after U.K. food safety officials ordered supermarkets and suppliers to test all processed meals labeled as beef for traces of horse meat.

Whitbread PLC, Britain's largest hotel and restaurant company, said horse DNA had been found in lasagna and burgers on its menus. The company, whose outlets include Premier Inn hotels and the Brewers Fayre and Beefeater Grill restaurant chains, said it was "shocked and disappointed at this failure of the processed meat supply chain."

Officials also said horse meat was present in cottage pies delivered to 47 schools in Lancashire county, northern England, and in hospital meals in Northern Ireland. David Bingham, of the health service's Business Services Organization, said the hospital meals, from a supplier in the Republic of Ireland, had been withdrawn.

She bites intruder, but loses tooth

GEORGE TOWN — Police in the Cayman Islands say a woman drove off an intruder by biting him. It cost her a tooth, though.

Police Chief Inspector Robert Scotland said the woman was home alone when she woke up to find a man standing over her bed. Scotland told The Associated Press on Friday that the woman bit the intruder when he put his hand over her mouth. He then fled.

He said that the woman was treated at a hospital and that police are still looking for the intruder.

The incident occurred early Thursday in the northwest part of Grand Cayman.

Athlete Oscar Pistorius weeps in court Friday in Pretoria, South Africa, during a court hearing in the shooting death of his girlfriend, model Reeva Steenkamp.

Pistorius disputes murder charge in 'strongest terms'

■ Athlete held in girlfriend's fatal shooting

By Jon Gambrell and Gerald Imray
Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa — In a courtroom, not an Olympic stadium, there was no click-click-click of Oscar Pistorius' prosthetic limbs. His only sound Friday was loud, uncontrollable sobs as prosecutors charged him with premeditated murder in the shooting death of his model girlfriend.

"Take it easy," Chief Magistrate Desmond Nasir told the Olympic star-turned-murder-defendant as his father, Henke, and his brother Carl reached out to touch his shoulder to comfort him.

The 26-year-old Pistorius, the double-amputee sprinter who won world acclaim by competing in last summer's London

Olympics, did not speak or enter a plea. He held his head and wept as he heard the charge, which carries a life sentence.

A statement released later by his family and agent said Pistorius disputed the murder charge "in the strongest terms."

The track star's arrest in the Valentine's Day killing of 29-year-old model Reeva Steenkamp shocked South Africa, where Pistorius was a national hero dubbed the Blade Runner for his high-tech prosthetics and revered for overcoming his disability to compete in the London Games.

Prosecutor Gerrie Nel said he would pursue a charge of premeditated murder against Pistorius in the slaying of Steenkamp, a leggy blonde model with a law degree who had spoken out on Twitter against rape and abuse of women.

She was discovered in a pool of blood before dawn Thursday by police called to Pistorius' upscale home in a gated community in the South African capital of Pretoria. Authorities said she had been shot four times, and a 9 mm pistol was recovered at the home.

Thronges of reporters, photographers and videographers filled the brick-walled Courtroom C in Pretoria Magistrate's Court, where Pistorius appeared. Nasir's first ruling focused on the press as he dismissed requests from the state broadcaster and a private television station to air the hearing live.

Police said investigators had conducted an autopsy on Steenkamp's body but the results would not be released.

Pistorius' family left quickly after the hearing, without speaking to journalists.

At the defense's request, the chief magistrate delayed a bail hearing until Tuesday for Pistorius, who was ordered held in a police holding cell, rather than transferred to a prison.

Pakistani Taliban seeking peace

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press

PESHAWAR, Pakistan — Five years after setting up an umbrella organization to unite violent militant groups in the nation's tribal regions, the Pakistani Taliban is fractured, strapped for cash and losing support of local tribesmen frustrated by a protracted war that has forced thousands from their homes, analysts and residents say.

The temperamental chief of the group known as the Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan (TTP), Hakimullah Mehsud, recently offered to start peace talks with the government, raising the prospect of a negotiated end to Pakistan's war against insurgents in a lawless region that runs the length of the border with Afghanistan.

The group's offer of sanctuary to Afghanistan's Taliban has been one of the most divisive issues in U.S.-Pakistan relations and has confounded efforts to get the upper hand against Afghan insurgents after more than 11 years of war.

Pakistan denies providing outright military and financial help to militants fighting in Afghanistan. With 120,000 Pakistani soldiers deployed in the tribal regions, Pakistan has waged its own bloody battle against insurgents that has left more than 4,000 soldiers dead.

Mehsud's network has emerged as a narrow collection of insurgents that has only limited influence.

Swiss firm scrutinized for its trading on Heinz

By Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Federal regulators have alleged that a Swiss brokerage account was used for illegal insider trading ahead of the H.J. Heinz acquisition Thursday.

The Securities and Exchange Commission obtained a court order Friday to freeze the account and prevent the assets from being moved.

The account was used for trades placed Wednesday that netted $1.7 million after the deal was

■ Brokerage made large stock purchases in days before deal announced. The SEC says it doesn't know the identity of the traders but said they "took risky bets" that Heinz's stock price would increase.

On Thursday, Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway and the Brazilian firm 3G announced they agreed to buy Heinz. Heinz's stock rose nearly 20 percent after the announcement.

The SEC is alleging that the traders must have known in advance about the pending transaction based on inside information.

The traders bought call options to make a huge profit of roughly 1,700 percent after the acquisition was announced.

Call options let investors place a bet on a stock without committing to buy the shares.

Investors instead have the option to buy the shares later for a set price.

The Swiss account hadn't traded securities related to Heinz for nearly six months before purchasing the options, the SEC said in a complaint filed in federal court in New York.

"Irregular and highly suspicious options trading immediately in front of a merger or acquisition announcement is a serious red flag that traders may be improperly acting on confidential nonpublic information," Daniel Hawke, an SEC official, said in a statement.

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Saturday, Feb. 16, the 47th day of 2013. There are 318 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:
On Feb. 16, 1968, the nation's first 911 emergency telephone system was inaugurated in Haleyville, Ala., as the speaker of the Alabama House, Rankin Fite, placed a call from the mayor's office in City Hall to a red telephone at the police station that was answered by U.S. Rep. Tom Bevill.

On this date:
In 1923, the burial chamber of King Tutankhamen's recently unearthed tomb was unsealed in Egypt by English archaeologist Howard Carter.

In 1937, Dr. Wallace H. Carothers, a research chemist for Du Pont who'd invented nylon, received a patent for the synthetic fiber.

In 1959, Fidel Castro became premier of Cuba a month and a half after the overthrow of Fulgencio Batista.

In 1961, the United States launched the Explorer 9 satellite.

In 1988, seven people were shot to death during an office rampage in Sunnyvale, Calif., by a man who was obsessed with a co-worker, who was wounded in the attack. (The gunman, Richard Farley, is under sentence of death.)

Ten years ago: Michael Waltrip raced past leader Jimmie Johnson to win the rain-shortened Daytona 500 for the second time in three years. Eleanor "Sis" Daley, the matriarch of Chicago's Daley political clan, died at age 95.

Five years ago: A car plowed into a group of street-racing fans obscured by a cloud of tire smoke on an isolated Maryland highway, killing eight people in the early morning darkness.

One year ago: A federal judge in Detroit ordered life in prison for Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, a young Nigerian man who'd tried to blow up a packed Northwest jetliner with a bomb concealed in his underwear. Hall of Fame catcher Gary Carter died in West Palm Beach, Fla., at age 57.

the pension system. He declined to elaborate on other proposals. “We’re trying to get everything together in a neat package that’s been vetted and that we know is accurate before we can give it to the caucus,” he said. Senate President Robert Stivers, R-Machester, told reporters it’s as if Stumbo is simply tossing ideas against a wall and seeing which ones might stick. Senate Floor Majority Leader Damon Thayer, R-Georgetown, said the Legislature should wait on the Instant Racing proposal until the Kentucky Supreme Court rules on its legality. The state’s highest court announced in January that it will review lower court rulings regarding Instant Racing, which critics contend is no different than illegal slot machines. A spokesman for The Family Foundation, the plaintiff in the Supreme Court case, said Friday that Instant Racing proponents are saying one thing to the courts and something completely different to the General Assembly. “For over two years, they’ve been telling the courts that Instant Racing is already legal and now they’re telling the General Assembly that they need a law to make it legal,” said Martin Cothran, spokesman for the group. “If Instant Racing is legal, a bill legalizing it wouldn’t be necessary would it?” Cothran asked. In other Kentucky legislative action on Friday: Military voters: Senate President Robert Stivers filed legislation to ensure Kentucky soldiers deployed overseas can cast ballots back home.

The bill was given the designation “Senate Bill 1,” signifying it is the Senate’s top priority in the current legislative session. Secretary of State Alison Grimes has been pushing for the bill. She said 121 soldiers from Kentucky didn’t have their ballots counted in last year’s election because they didn’t arrive back in the state by Election Day. The bill allows or electronic transmission of ballots, instead of relying on traditional mail. Grimes visited soldiers and reviewed military voting during a trip to the Middle East in September. She said she concluded that the current system was falling short. Human trafficking: Human trafficking laws in Kentucky would be strengthened to better protect victims while adding more punishments for offenders under a bill that passed the House Friday. The chamber voted unanimously, 95-0, in favor of the measure, which now proceeds to the Senate for consideration. The House passed similar legislation last year, but it died in the Senate. The bill bars authorities from charging victims with prostitution and instead mandates that they receive treatment and other protections, such as protective custody, during an investigation. The bill also would require offenders to forfeit property used in forced labor crimes and pay a $10,000 fine, all of which would finance a fund for Kentucky’s human trafficking victims. Democratic Gov. Steve Beshear called upon lawmakers in this month’s State of the Commonwealth address to pass human trafficking legislation. Rep. Sannie Overly, a Paris Democrat, sponsored the proposal. She told lawmakers before the vote that fewer than 20 human trafficking cases have been prosecuted in Kentucky since 2008. But since then, she said, 151 victims received services from Kentucky Rescue and Restore, which is operated by Catholic Charities of Louisville. The bill’s human trafficking fund would pay for more training for law enforcement to better identify the crime and to prosecute it. “For those of you who think that human trafficking happens in big cities, that it happens in New York and Chicago and Los Angeles, it does,” Overly said. “But the sad news is that I’m going to report is that it’s also going on in our backyards.” More than 300 calls from inside Kentucky were made to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center’s hotline between 2007 and early 2012, The Lexington Herald-Leader reported last year. Fifty-two percent of those calls dealt with sex trafficking, that includes all students had more than 27,000 likes. The fallout has surprised many residents, who say the issue roiling the community in an area known for coal mining and attractive parks is being blown out of proportion. “We are conservative around here. That’s just the way of this town,” said Nancy Woodard, 60, who owns the Hidden Treasure Exchange store. “In any town in this county, you’ll find four or five churches no matter how small the town. ... The Bible is a big belief system here. “Everybody has jumped on this little town. To me, there isn’t any need for it,” she said. Sullivan High School Principal David Springer said talk of the “traditional” prom began in January, after a student began circulating a petition demanding that gays be allowed to participate in the grand march at Sullivan’s April 27 prom. The “traditional” prom would not be sanctioned by the district and wouldn’t be held at the school. Springer said the school, which has 545 students in grades 9-12, has never banned same-sex pairs from the event.

This photo shows the Henderson Water Utility’s new aeration basin project, which is in the midst of starting up. It is a $1.6 million project that will help the city utility meet obligations under the Clean Water Act as well as an agreement which was signed with the state of Kentucky. The pipes in the foreground are stainless steel air piping, and the round items in the background are rubber diffusers that will cause fine bubbles to rise through about 7.5 million gallons of wastewater, helping to keep it mixed, and allowing bacteria that naturally grow in human waste to ingest some of the “bad” things in the water, eventually leading to clean water that goes to the Ohio River.

But that’s history now and they hardly need to prove themselves after two Grammy Awards, 15 nominations and performances all over the world. The group took the world spotlight in the mid-1980s when pop singer Paul Simon visited South Africa and incorporated Black Mambazo’s rich tenor/alto/bass harmonies into his “Graceland” album — a landmark recording that was considered seminal in introducing world music to mainstream audiences.

A year later, Simon produced Black Mambazo’s first U.S. release, “Shaka Zulu”, which won a Grammy Award in 1988. Their most recent cd release, “Songs From A Zulu Farm,” was nominated at the recent Grammy Awards. In addition to their work with Simon, Ladysmith Black Mambazo has recorded with numerous artists from around the world, including Stevie Wonder, Dolly Parton, Sarah McLachlan, Josh Groban, Emmylou Harris, Melissa Etheridge, and many others. METEOR from 1A of glass, according to city officials, who said 3,000 buildings in Chelyabinsk were damaged. At a zinc factory, part of the roof collapsed. The Interior Ministry said about 1,100 people sought medical care after the shock wave and 48 were hospitalized. Most of the injuries were caused by flying glass, officials said. Scientists estimated the meteor unleashed a force 20 times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb, although the space rock exploded at a much higher altitude. Amy Mainzer, a scientist at NASA’s Jet Propulsion Laboratory, said the atmosphere acted as a shield. The shock wave may have shattered windows, but “the atmosphere absorbed the vast majority of that energy,” she said. Emergency Situations Ministry spokesman Vladimir Purgin said many of the injured were cut as they flocked to windows to see what caused the intense flash of light, which momentarily was brighter than the sun. There was no immediate word on any deaths or anyone struck by space fragments. President Vladimir

Putin summoned the nation’s emergencies minister and ordered immediate repairs. “We need to think how to help the people and do it immediately,” he said. Some meteorite fragments fell in a reservoir outside the town of Cherbakul, the regional Interior Ministry office said. The crash left an eight-meter (26-foot) crater in the ice. Lessons had just started at Chelyabinsk schools when the meteor exploded, and officials said 258 children were among those injured. Amateur video showed a teacher speaking to her class as a powerful shock wave hit the room. Yekaterina Melikhova, a high school student whose nose was bloody and whose upper lip was covered with a bandage, said she was in her geography class when a bright light flashed outside. “After the flash, nothing happened for about three minutes. Then we rushed outdoors. ... The door was made of glass, a shock wave made it hit us,” she said. Meteors typically cause sizeable sonic booms when they enter the atmosphere because they are traveling so much faster than the speed of sound. Injuries on the scale reported Friday, however, are extraordinarily rare.

The many broken windows exposed residents to the bitter cold as temperatures in the city were expected to plummet to minus 20 Celsius (minus 4 Fahrenheit) overnight. The regional governor put out a call for any workers who knew how to repair windows. The dramatic event prompted an array of reactions from prominent Russians. Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev, speaking at an economic forum in the Siberian city of Krasnoyarsk, said the meteor could be a symbol for the forum, showing that “not only the economy is vulnerable, but the whole planet.” Vladimir Zhirinovsky, a nationalist leader noted for his vehement statements, blamed the Americans. “It’s not meteors falling. It’s the test of a new weapon by the Americans,” the RIA Novosti news agency quoted him as saying. Deputy Prime Minister Dmitry Rogozin said the incident showed the need for leading world powers to develop a system to intercept objects falling from space. “At the moment, neither we nor the Americans have such technologies” to shoot down meteors or asteroids, he said, according to the Interfax news agency.

Ex-mayor's gambling woes stun San Diego

■ O'Connor seems to place blame on brain tumor The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Maureen O'Connor was a physical education teacher who won a seat on the San Diego City Council when she was only 25 years old, later winning two terms as the city’s first female mayor as she charmed voters with a populist flair. But her rapid rise was matched by her fall, culminating Thursday when she acknowledged in federal court that she took $2.1 million from her late husband’s charitable foundation during a decade-long gambling spree in which she won — and lost — more than $1 billion. O'Connor pleaded not guilty to a money laundering charge in an agreement with the Justice Department that defers prosecution for two years while she tries to repay the foundation and receives treatment for gambling. O'Connor, 66, once had a personal fortune that her attorney estimated between $40 million and $50 million, inherited from her husband of 17 years, Robert O. Peterson, founder of the Jack in the Box Inc. fast-food chain. She is now virtually broke, living with a sister. At a news conference, she said she always intended to repay the foundation and appeared to blame her behavior on a brain tumor that was diagnosed in 2011. “There are two Maureens — Maureen No. 1 and Maureen No. 2,” said O'Connor, who declined to take questions. “Maureen No. 2 is the Maureen who did not know she had a tumor growing in her brain.” O'Connor’s game of choice was video poker at casinos in San Diego, Las Vegas and Atlantic City, N.J. She won about $1 billion from 2000 to 2009, according to winnings that casinos reported to the Internal Revenue Service, but lost even more. Iredale said her net gambling losses topped $13 million. News of O'Connor’s gambling troubles and financial ruin elicited sympathy in her hometown. Magistrate Judge David Bartick told her that she left “a very strong legacy in the city of San Diego.”

Cols roll past Red Devils

■ Senior Night a big success as Henderson cruises 75-45

By Kevin Patton
kpatton@thegleaner.com

An unconventional starting lineup on Senior Night set the tone for Henderson County's 75-45 rout of Owensboro on Friday. The Colonels put four of their five seniors on the floor for the first 2 1/2 minutes of the final game of the regular season. The crew established immediately that the team was reaffirming the aggressive play that had served it so well in compiling a 23-5 record. "They started the game off with some intensity. That shows me how important they've been to this program over the last four years because they got their younger teammates to play that hard for them on their night," Henderson County coach Tyler Smithhart said. "They set the tone."

Seniors Rick Armstead, Hunter Comer, Jalen Grimes and Chad Sellars drew the starting assignments along with sophomore D.J. Washington. The Colonels trailed 7-2 when Smithhart began bringing the regulars back in, but he already knew the team was shaking off the confusion that had developed in recent games. "The last few games our guys have tried to please us as coaches, but we weren't on the same wavelength," Smithhart said. "They saw it as, 'They want us to slow down. They want us to throw it in the post no matter what happens.' Tonight we played a balanced game. We played an unselfish game. We did go inside-out, but we did so by being aggressive on the offensive end and taking our open shots. And we pressed the entire game. That's who we are." Henderson County used a pair of 13-0 runs — one in the first half and another in the second half — to pull away from Owensboro in an up-tempo game with numerous fast-break baskets on the heels of Thursday's 59-49 overtime loss to Bowling Green that was mostly played in the half-court.

"This game showed us that even against athletic teams who like to get up and down, we can still be who we are. We can still be the Colonels who played up-tempo and very aggressive all year long. That's what got us here. We can't get away from that," Smithhart said. Kaleb Duckworth, who missed all of last week with the flu, led the Colonels with 16 points and six rebounds. "When Kaleb's willing to take that short corner jump shot, which we beg him to take all the time, you know Kaleb feels it. He was an absolute animal on the boards," Smithhart said. Late in the third quarter, Duckworth was the recipient of a no-look pass in the paint from Cain Cooper, who threaded the assist behind a Owensboro defender. "Cain has been so steady all the way through. Some nights we're calling on him to score the ball. Some nights it's dumping it down. His defense has been there every night," said Smithhart, who saw his post player often matched up with Owensboro's 240-pounder Justin Miller. "He's cutting weight for pole vault and he's in there banging against guys who are a whole lot heavier than he is. He just brings his lunch pail every day and keeps working." David Simmons added 14 points for Henderson County, which outscored Owensboro 23-9 in the second quarter and 20-13 in the third. The Colonels forced Owensboro into 23 turnovers, while committing only six themselves. Trey Howard and Miller led Owensboro (16-10) with 13 points apiece. Howard also had 10 rebounds. The team's seniors, which includes the injured Corey Sanners, were honored as part of the school's Senior Night activities before the game. Henderson County won the junior varsity game 59-32 to finish its season with a 19-0 record. Brady Norman led the Colonels with 25 points, while Andrew Mattingly added nine. The Colonels won't play again until Thursday in the championship game of the Sixth District Tournament at Union County. They will face the winner of Tuesday's contest between Union County and Webster County.

Wildcats begin life without Nerlens

■ Today's game at Tennessee is first outing after big setback

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LEXINGTON — Kentucky players have had three days to digest the impact of Nerlens Noel's season-ending knee injury. The 25th-ranked Wildcats' Southeastern Conference game at Tennessee on Saturday will be their first gut check since enduring the enormous setback. The star freshman forward tore his left ACL in Kentucky's 69-52 loss at Florida on Tuesday night. The devastating injury will mean a new rotation for the young Wildcats (17-7, 8-3), who struggled to develop chemistry this season even with the nation's top shot-blocker on the floor. Besides raising their games to offset the loss of Noel's contributions on both ends of the floor, Kentucky players must do it quickly to slow Tennessee (13-10, 5-6). The Volunteers have won four of their last six behind forward Jarnell Stokes, who has posted six straight double-doubles. For the defending national champions, the task is building the resolve and performance to meet challenges that extend beyond this weekend. "We just got a clean slate. It's like a brand new season now," said 7-foot freshman forward Willie Cauley-Stein, who will man the post after spending most of the season as Noel's backup. "We've got to figure out how to play with his absence and do things different. The first couple of games it's going to be uncomfortable for us, but if we get used to it and just buy into what Coach is saying, we'll be alright." How differently Kentucky plays, coach John Calipari couldn't say Friday because the team hasn't practiced much since Noel's injury. But he sounded curious to see what adversity brings from his roster. Calipari doesn't expect Cauley-Stein to copy Noel's all-around averages of 10.5 points, 9.5 rebounds and 4.4 blocks per game. Nor does the coach foresee huge offensive breakthroughs from his personnel given their periodic inconsistency. But Calipari doesn't think his Wildcats have forgotten the gains they had during their five-game winning streak that ended at Florida, either. No doubt, losing Noel is a huge blow on many levels that will take some doing to overcome. Calipari, echoing Cauley-Stein, believes his players have the ability to do "a little bit more."

Kentucky forward Willie Cauley-Stein (15) shoots over Florida's Casey Prather (24) during their game in Gainesville, Fla., on Tuesday night. Cauley-Stein will man the post for the Wildcats after the season-ending injury to Nerlens Noel.

"Obviously, we can make up rebounds and points," he said. "Those blocked shots are what you're not going to make up. So, we'll see. This team has a clean slate. It's a blank canvas. It's whatever they want it to be. ... "You know what's funny? We win five of six. We do have an injury that can either bring you together or separate you. But now we're on the cusp of, 'OK, let's see what we are. Let's learn.'" At the very least, players such as Cauley-Stein will earn more minutes and he's eager to see how his game develops with added playing time. Though admittedly lacking Noel's shot-blocking skills, he can score, rebound and steal the ball. Cauley-Stein, who missed four games last month following a minor procedure on his left knee, believes the key is doing what he does well better rather than imitating Noel. "I'm not Nerlens," said Cauley-Stein, averaging 7.8 points, 5.5 rebounds and 1.6 blocks per game. "He does things that are just uncanny. His ability to block shots, I don't have that ability. What I do have is athleticism, be able to play out on a guard, simple stuff like that and just hustle. That's all I have to take care of."

His immediate task is handling the 6-8, 270-pound Stokes, the reigning SEC player of the week. Averaging 12.6 points and 8.6 rebounds per game overall (9.8 boards in league play), the sophomore forward is the first conference player with six consecutive double-doubles since Kentucky's DeMarcus Cousins had seven straight in 2010. At different points this season, Calipari has called out sophomore guard Ryan Harrow and freshmen Alex Poythress and Archie Goodwin either for their lack of hustle, attitude or decision-making. But Calipari said everybody needs to step up their play if Kentucky hopes to make the NCAA tournament. That means opportunities for Kentucky players such as 6-7 junior Jon Hood, who last year went through what Noel will face when he undergoes surgery in the next two to three weeks. The guard's recovery has been slow this season but he now feels ready to play more minutes and contribute wherever he's needed. Hood is confident the Wildcats can adopt that same approach, one bright side in an otherwise gloomy week for Kentucky. "We still believe that this team can do real special things," Hood said. "There's still a whole lot of talent on this team, we just need to come together, that's all. No Nerlens is a big thing. That's a big loss, but nothing that can't be made up."

Braves lead after first day of state wrestling

Gleaner staff

LEXINGTON — Union County ended the first day of competition in the state wrestling championships in first as the Braves put eight of their 14 wrestlers into the quarterfinals. Union County, which is seeking its seventh state title, leads the field with 80 1/2 points. Campbell County is in second with 74 1/2. St. Xavier is third at 70 1/2 and Trinity fourth at 60. The Braves have individual title contenders in seven of the eight lightest weight divisions. Winning their opening two matches were 106-pound eighth-grader Bryce Sheffer, junior Robbie Dezember at 113, junior Trae Blackwell at 120, junior Brock Ervin at 126, senior Jayce Carr at 138, senior Jeffrey Wurth at 145, junior Chad Gahafer at 152 and junior Devin Smith at 182. Ervin, a three-time state champion already, won both of his matches by pin in 23 and 40 seconds. Four of the other six Union County wrestlers are still alive through two rounds in the consolation bracket. They are senior Gabe Ervin, 132; senior Brian French, 160; junior Bryan Carter, 195; and sophomore Raynel Brown, 285. Matches resume today at 8:30 a.m. Central time beginning with the quarterfinal matches. The championship matches will begin at approximately 5:30 p.m. at the Alltech Arena at the Kentucky Horse Park.

College hoops ‘brutal to watch’

■ Bumping, banging make the games look like roller derby

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA – There is dribbling, lots of dribbling, in college basketball these days. There is bumping and banging, lots of bumping and banging. Not to mention all the grabbing and tripping and colliding.

If this was roller derby, it would be OK. But this is NCAA hoops, and it’s downright ugly.

There is little running the court, or soaring through the air, or crisscrossing through the lane, all the things that make this such a beautiful game. No, more often than not it’s just organized mayhem, with plenty of stalling thrown in for good measure, which not surprisingly makes everyone look like the Gang That Couldn’t Shoot Straight.

The college game, quite frankly, is in need of a major overhaul.

“Our game is brutal to watch right now,” said Jay Bilas, an analyst for ESPN.

In case you haven’t noticed — and how could you not? — scoring hasn’t been this low since at least 1982, and one has to go all the way back to the early 1950s to find another season that beats this one for offensive ineptitude. Field-goal percentages are at 1960s levels. Three-point shooting has never been this bad since the long-range line was added in the 1980s.

Some people want to blame the players, saying they’re not as good as they once were, not as fundamentally sound, that the good ones don’t stick around long enough to make an impact on the game.

Hogwash. The players are as good as they’ve ever been. Sure, it hurts when someone takes the one-and-done route, but that’s not the major issue confronting

JOE RAYMOND/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Notre Dame guard Cameron Biedscheid, right, collides with DePaul forward Peter Ryckbosch during the first half of a game on Wednesday night in South Bend, Ind. All the bumping, banging, tripping and colliding have made college basketball tough to watch this season.

the game. No, this is about coaches who paralyze their players with over-coaching, about referees who are reluctant to call all the fouls they surely see, about a scattered system of governance that makes it difficult to address the problems with a broad stroke.

So, while professional leagues such as the NBA, the NFL and even the NHL have taken significant steps to clean up their sports and boost scoring, college basketball has gone the opposite direction.

“It’s organized fouling,” Bilas said. “The referees feel like they can’t call it all, and they don’t call it all. The result is we’re having wrestling matches instead of basketball games. It doesn’t take long, if you’re really watching, to see what’s happening and say, ‘Oh my god, this is awful.’”

Awful, indeed. Northern Illinois set an NCAA record by scoring only four points in the first half of a 42-25 loss to Eastern Michigan, and it’s not at all that unusual for teams to be held under 50 points. The elite programs aren’t immune to these sort of games, either. Last month, Kansas scored fewer than 70 points in six straight games for the first time since the mid-’70s. And guess what? The Jayhawks won all six of them, content to run the shot clock and rely on their stifling defense.

Even teams that prefer to run-and-gun can sometimes look like they’re playing in quicksand. North Carolina State, for instance, is tied with Duke for the Atlantic Coast Conference scoring lead at 78 points per game. But the Wolfpack lost to Maryland 51-50, and fell to Virginia 55-52.

“Our game,” coach Mark Gottfried said, “is tremendously more physical than it used to be. I think it’s a gradual thing, year by year by year by year. All you have to do is grab a tape from the ‘90s or the mid-’80s, and you can watch it and you’ll say, ‘Wow, there’s very little contact.’”

Anyone can see the game is more physical than ever, but you can’t tell by listening for sound of the whistle. Incredibly, fouls have dipped to a per-team average of 17.6, nearly a half-foul less than last season and on pace to be the fewest in NCAA history, going back to 1948.

“These games are ridiculous,” Bilas said. “The amount of contact that’s allowed — the hand-checking, the arm bars, the dead-on pushing, the body checks on the shooter, the contact after the shot is released. Guys are getting knocked down and it’s not called.”

But this isn’t necessarily a knock on the refs. With 32 Division I conferences overseeing the officials (at least until they get to the NCAA tournament, when the national governing body takes over), there’s too many masters and not a clear way to implement the sort of widespread changes that are needed in the way the game is called.

Which brings us to a few of the changes that are needed ASAP to get the game back on track:

■ Consolidate the referees under one sanctioning body. It’s vital that everyone be held to the same standard. For instance, if hand-checking is going to be a point of emphasis, then everyone should get the memo, regardless of what league they’re playing in. At the very least, Bilas said, the major conferences should come together on this issue.

■ Follow the rule book. A bunch of new regulations aren’t needed; there’s plenty of things that aren’t being called already. No one wants see the game become nothing more than a free-throw contest, and it may take a year or two for the message to sink in. But it will.

■ Reduce the 35-second shot clock. This is more of a step to show the fans that college basketball is serious about addressing its problems, and likely would have less impact than the first two steps. But going with the NBA’s 24-second clock or, at the very least, the 30-second clock already used in the women’s game would undoubtedly create more possessions.

Certainly, there needs to be more shooting. This season, teams are taking an average of 55.2 shots per game, which is roughly on par with the past few seasons but pales in comparison to the 1950s, ‘60s and early 70s, when the average was generally in the high 60s.

Which brings us to another matter that can’t be addressed through legislation: coaching.

Unlike the NBA, this will always be a game that’s more about the guys wearing suits than those out on the court. And too many of the suits have decided that winning is all that matters, even if the style they’re using is ruining the game.

Pitino is among the 12 finalists for the Hall

Wire reports

Louisville coach Rick Pitino and former NBA stars Gary Payton, Tim Hardaway and Mitch Richmond were among 12 finalists announced Friday for election into the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Former Houston coach Guy Lewis and former UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian also are finalists for the 2013 class. The others included former NBA stars Maurice Cheeks, Spencer Haywood and Bernard King, longtime North Carolina women’s coach Sylvia Hatchell and five-time WNBA All-Star Dawn Staley. Boston Celtics great Tom Heinsohn, already inducted as a player, is a finalist in the coaching category.

The announcement of the finalists kicked off All-Star Weekend in Houston. The 2013 class will be announced at the Final Four in April.

Brazilian great Oscar Schmidt, former NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik, former ABA star Roger Brown, six-time All-Star Richard Guerin and Edwin Henderson, a black player from the early part of the 20th century were directly elected for induction. Granik worked as the NBA’s executive vice president from 1984-90 and was the president of USA Basketball from 1996-2000.

Longtime Bucks announcer Eddie Doucette and writer John Feinstein were recipients of the Curt Gowdy media awards and former college coach George Raveling was honored with a lifetime achievement award.

■ If Kobe Bryant’s season seems tough, imagine what Dwyane Wade went through five years ago.

“I came to All-Star weekend one year, I think we had won nine games. Seriously,” Wade said Friday. “I was looking for my 10th win at the All-Star game.”

Things sure have changed for his Miami Heat.

Back where they first teamed up as All-Stars in 2006, Wade, LeBron James and Chris Bosh return as NBA champions who will start together for the Eastern Conference on Sunday night.

Now the misery belongs to Bryant, Dwight Howard and the Los Angeles Lakers, whose season has been so disappointing that Bryant was asked Friday if the All-Star weekend was a “retreat” for him.

“I don’t know if it’s a retreat, it’s just more of an opportunity to get some rest, regroup, put the first half of the season behind us and move on,” he said.

Bosh was chosen as a starter Friday by Heat coach Erik Spoelstra, who will lead the East. He replaces Boston guard Rajon Rondo, who pulled out with a torn ACL.

Practice at Daytona includes 5-car wreck

Wire reports

It took about 10 minutes to wreck several cars at Daytona International Speedway on Friday.

Matt Kenseth triggered a five-car accident in the opening practice for the Sprint Unlimited, the non-points race that kicks off the season.

Kurt Busch, Carl Edwards, Mark Martin and Juan Pablo Montoya also were involved in the crash.

Busch’s No. 78 Chevrolet sustained the most damage, forcing the team to switch to a backup car for Saturday night’s exhibition event. Edwards and Martin also went to backups.

weeks of preparation can be trashed in six laps.”

Kenseth took blame for the melee, saying he didn’t see Busch gaining ground inside his No. 20 Toyota on the 2 1/2-mile superspeedway.

“That was 100 percent driver error, my driver error,” Kenseth said. “I had no idea anybody was there and he had a run at the same time and I came down in front of him and he couldn’t get slowed up from staying out of me. It was a hundred percent my fault.”

The accident came less than 10 laps into the first practice of Speedweeks. It was supposed to be a learning session for NASCAR’s redesigned race car, the one dubbed “Generation 6,” and a preview of next weekend’s Daytona 500.

Instead, it turned out much like a test at Daytona last month. Dale Earnhardt Jr. caused that big one when he turned Marcos Ambrose, causing a 12-car wreck that essentially ended the three-day session.

Teams returned to the track this week in hopes of learning more about the new cars, which have been tweaked to more closely resemble those that are in manufacturer showrooms. They also have different driving characteristics.

The wreck caused several teams to sit out the second practice session Friday night.

“As soon as we saw one wreck, I think everybody was going to play chicken and not go out much after that,” defending event winner Kyle Busch said.

The season-opening event used to be called the Budweiser Shootout. NASCAR changed the name this year along with the entry rules.

The sanctioning body went back to race’s roots, inviting pole winners from the previous season and former event winners who raced at least once during the previous season to enter.

The result was a made-for-TV event that included five former Cup champions and nine former Shootout winners in the 19-car field.

Five-time series champion Jimmie Johnson, four-time champion Jeff Gordon and three-time champion Tony Stewart are in the field. So are two-time race winner Kevin Harvick and fan favorite Dale Earnhardt Jr.

Reigning Sprint Cup champion Brad Keselowski, though, didn’t earn a spot in retooled race.

■ ARCA will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its first race at Daytona International Speedway on Saturday.

The field includes drivers of all ages, from 20-year-old Kyle Larson to 78-year-old James Hylton. Larson is one of 20 first-time drivers at Daytona.

John Wes Townley took the pole and Milka Duno is second. Eight-time Daytona ARCA winner Bobby Gerhart is third in the 40-car field.

Jacobson, Bae tied for the lead at Riviera

Wire reports

A move down the California coast hasn’t changed a thing for Fredrik Jacobson.

One week after a solid finish at Pebble Beach, Jacobson birdied the two toughest holes at Riviera on Friday his way to a 6-under 65 and a share of the lead with Sang-Moon Bae going into the weekend at the Northern Trust Open.

Jacobson and Bae were at 9-under 133, one shot ahead of John Merrick (66) and John Rollins (65).

Still very much in the picture was Luke Donald, who chipped in twice for birdie and had a 66. That left him two shots out of the lead in his first tournament in two months. Phil Mickelson had a 67 that included a double bogey on the 10th hole and was five shots out the lead.

■ Champions Tour: Bernhard Langer holed out from the fairway for an eagle on the par-4 10th and finished with a 10-under 62 on Friday to take a three-stroke lead in the Champions Tour’s ACE Group Classic.

Langer had three birdies on the front nine on TwinEagles’ Talon Course, then played the back nine in 7-under 29 with the eagle and five birdies — including four in a row on Nos. 13-16.

The 55-year-old German star, a 16-time winner on the 50-and-over tour, won the event in 2011 at The Quarry.

Bob Tway was second after a 65, and Tom Pernice Jr., Jay Don Blake and John Huston shot 66.

■ LPGA Tour: Mari-ajo Uribe shot a six-under 67 on Friday to overtake South Korea’s Jiyai Shin and overnight leader Lydia Ko, claiming the second-round lead at the LPGA Tour’s Women’s Australian Open.

The Colombian opened with a birdie after teeing off on the par-4 10th and made four more at Royal Canberra, including at the sixth and seventh as she moved to 15-under 131 and a one-stroke lead.

Two-time British Open-winner Shin fired eight birdies against two bogeys for a 67, sharing second with 15-year-old amateur Ko, who followed an opening 63 with a 69 that included five birdies and a bogey on the par-4 14th.

■ Africa Open: Brazil’s Adilson Da Silva opened a three-stroke lead in the Africa Open on Friday, completing a 10-under 62 in the wind-delayed first round and shooting a 68 in the second.

The 41-year-old Da Silva had a 14-under 130 total on the East London course in the event sanctioned by the European and South Africans tours.

South Africa’s Jaco Van Zyl was second after a 67, and England’s John Parry was 10 under after a 66.

Pistorius sobs at court hearing

■ Prosecutors announce charge of premeditated murder against him

By Jon Gambrell
and Gerald Imray
Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa — Oscar Pistorius, the double-amputee sprinter who won world acclaim by competing in last summer's Olympics, broke into loud sobs on Friday after prosecutors announced a charge of premeditated murder against him in the shooting death of his model girlfriend.

The 26-year-old athlete held his head and wept upon learning of the charge, the most serious under South African law, which carries a mandatory life sentence. He did not speak or enter a plea, but a statement released later by his family and agent said Pistorius disputed the murder charge "in the strongest terms."

The track star's arrest in the Valentine's Day killing of 29-year-old model Reeva Steenkamp shocked South Africa, where Pistorius was a national hero dubbed the Blade Runner for his high-tech prosthetics and revered for overcoming his disability to compete in the London Games.

At Friday's court hearing, Pistorius wept uncontrollably, drawing the attention of Chief Magistrate Desmond Nasir, who at one point told him simply, "Take it easy."

Pistorius' brother, Carl, and his father, Henke, reached out to touch his shoulder to comfort him as he sat slumped and grim-faced in the dock.

Prosecutor Gerrie Nel said he would pursue a charge of premeditated murder against Pistorius in the slaying of Steenkamp, a leggy blonde model with a law degree who had spoken out on Twitter against rape and abuse of women.

She was discovered in a pool of blood before dawn Thursday by police called to Pistorius' upscale home in a gated community in the South African capital of Pretoria. Authorities said she had been shot four times, and a 9 mm pistol was recovered at the home.

Throngs of reporters, photographers and videographers filled the brick-walled Courtroom C in Pretoria Magistrate's Court, where Pistorius appeared. Nasir's first ruling focused on the press as he dismissed requests from the state broadcaster and a private television station to air the hearing live.

Nasir also ordered that no photographs be taken while court was in session. That left dozens of photographers kneeling less than a yard from the sobbing Pistorius to simply stare at a man many had photographed previously sprinting on his famous carbon-fiber blades.

Police said investigators had conducted an autopsy on Steenkamp's body but the results would not be released.

Pistorius' family left quickly after the hearing, without speaking to journalists. In a statement later Friday, the family and his London-based management agency questioned the criminal charge the athlete faces.

"The alleged murder is disputed in the strongest terms," the statement said, without elaborating. It added that Pistorius wanted to "send his deepest sympathies to the family of Reeva."

"He would also like to express his thanks through us today for all the messages of support he has received — but as stated our thoughts and prayers today should be for Reeva and her family — regardless of the circumstances of this terrible, terrible tragedy," the statement read.

Since news of the slaying, shock waves have rippled across South Africa, a nation of 50 million where nearly 50 people are killed each day, one of the world's highest murder rates. U.N. statistics say the nation has the second highest rate of shooting deaths in the world, behind only Colombia.

Many wore black Friday to demonstrate against the high levels of violence against women in the country.

Others focused their attention on Pistorius and his fascination with fast cars, cage fighting and firearms.

Those who knew Pistorius, including a former girlfriend, weighed in on social media.

Trish Taylor, mother of Pistorius' ex-girlfriend, Samantha Taylor, wrote on Facebook: "I'm so glad Sammy is safe and out of the clutches of that man."

But another

ex-girlfriend, Jenna Edkins, took to Twitter to defend him.

"All I am saying is let him speak, let his side be heard without jumping to conclusions," she tweeted, offering "love and support" to the Pistorius family.

"I have dated Oscar on and off for 5 YEARS, NOT ONCE has he EVER lifted a finger to me or made me fear for my life."

At the defense request, the chief magistrate delayed a bail hearing until Tuesday for Pistorius, who was ordered held in a police holding cell, rather than transferred to prison.

In seeking a premeditated murder charge against Pistorius, prosecutors appear to be claiming they have evidence the athlete planned the killing ahead of time, said William Booth, a prominent Cape Town defense lawyer.

Colts make it official: Freeney will not be back

Wire reports

The Indianapolis Colts said Friday they will not re-sign former league sacks champion Dwight Freeney or oft-injured receiver Austin Collie.

Both will become unrestricted free agents next month.

Collie just couldn't stay healthy. He wound up on season-ending injured reserve in September with a ruptured patellar tendon in his right knee and there were continual concerns about a series of concussions he had.

Freeney, Indy's career sacks leader, turns 33 next week. His sacks totals declined for a third straight year in 2012, this time after moving from defensive end to outside linebacker.

Team owner Jim Irsay said in a statement that few players had more impact on the Colts' success than Freeney, who Irsay calls an "artist" and a "joy to watch."

■ Charles Woodson is on the market.

"We are grateful for all that Charles has given to the Green Bay Packers over the past seven years," general manager Ted Thompson said. "He has been an integral part of the Packers' success."

The Packers clear about $10 million in cap space by releasing Woodson. Carl Poston, Woodson's agent, said the veteran wasn't done yet.

Woodson signed a five-year deal before the 2010 season that was worth as much as $55 million.

Woodson was the NFL Defensive Player of the Year in 2009 and the Defensive Rookie of the Year in 1998. He spent the first eight years of his career with the Oakland Raiders, who drafted him out of Michigan with the No. 4 overall pick.

■ Finally, the St. Louis Rams have a defensive coordinator.

After interviewing several big-name candidates, including Rob Ryan, Mike Singletary and Dick Jauron, coach Jeff Fisher decided on Tim Walton, a Lions secondary coach who is still building his resume.

"At the end of the day, you take advantage of patience, and we did so," Fisher said Friday at a news conference to announce the hire. "Without hesitation, he is absolutely the right guy."

Fisher said he spent two days with Jauron and one with Singletary, neither of whom he felt were good fits because of differences in terminology. Ryan, hired as the Saint defensive coordinator last week, got a longer look before backing out.

The Rams finally settled on the 41-year-old Walton, whose top selling point for Fisher was familiarity with the system. Walton coached under former Fisher aide Jim Schwartz in Detroit, who runs a similar defense.

■ The Minnesota Vikings have no intention of trading wide receiver Percy Harvin, general manager Rick Spielman said Friday.

Spielman refused to comment specifically on Harvin's contract situation, citing his usual policy about any Vikings player or coach. Spielman said team officials, as always, will meet next week at the NFL scouting combine with the agents for every player, which of course includes Harvin's representative, Joel Segal.

Spielman declined to address the possibility of negotiating a new deal for Harvin, who will be in the final year of his contract in 2013.

Reds' Votto eager to test knee this spring

■ Star hopes his power will return this season

By Gary Schatz
Associated Press

GOODYEAR, Ariz. — Joey Votto is really looking forward to rounding the bases.

The Cincinnati Reds first baseman hasn't hit a homer since June 24 last season, when he connected off Scott Diamond of the Minnesota Twins. He tore cartilage in his left knee while sliding into base and needed two operations to fix the problem, sidelining him for 48 games.

When he returned, the knee wasn't back to full-strength and it showed in his swing. The NL's 2010 MVP was reduced to hitting mostly singles.

He's gotten stronger in the offseason and he's ready to see how the knee holds up when he plays baseball again. He's looking forward to hitting his first home run, "hopefully opening day." The 29-year-old had his physical Friday morning and passed all of his tests.

MICHAEL KEATING/ASSOCIATED PRESS

In this Oct. 10, 2012, file photo, the Cincinnati Reds' Joey Votto walks back to the dugout after striking out against the San Francisco Giants in Game 4 of the National League division series in Cincinnati. Votto missed 48 games at midseason with a knee injury and didn't hit a homer after June 24.

"They had very positive things to say, but ultimately the real test is on the field," Votto said. "I am just trying to get my legs back to 100 percent. It's not perfect, but I think that after surgery, my expectations — realistically you're not going to be perfect five months out."

"However, as far as movement, being able to do baseball stuff, hitting, throwing, I feel really good."

He injured the knee sliding into third base in San Francisco on June 29. He played in seven more games before tests found torn cartilage. He had surgery to fix it, then another procedure to remove a piece of cartilage floating in the knee on Aug. 11.

Votto had never been seriously injured until last season.

"I have sympathy. People's injuries resonate with me more because of my experience," he said. "It probably made me a better teammate. It made me more aware of my body and its limitations, no matter how good I'm feeling."

Votto knew he would be limited when he returned. Unable to push off his left leg as much as normal, he became more of a singles hitter. Pitches that he would drive into the gaps when healthy never made it to the wall.

"I knew what I could and couldn't do," Votto said. "I tried to make the most of it. Despite the lack of power, I was pretty proud of what I did do."

Before his injury, Votto was on pace to hit 66 doubles. The major league record is 67 set by Earl Webb of Boston in 1931. In the last 25 games of the season, Votto hit .316 with eight doubles. He hit .389 in the division series against San Francisco, but all seven of his hits were singles.

He finished with 44 doubles, just seven shy of the Reds team record held by Frank Robinson in 1962 and Pete Rose in 1978.

Votto still led the National League with a .474 on-base-percentage, but fell 27 plate appearances short of qualifying for the NL batting crown. He finished with a .337 average, while NL batting champion Buster Posey hit .336.

Even at less than full-strength, he helped the Reds clinch their second NL Central title in three seasons. They lost to San Francisco in the opening round.

Votto would like to get to the point where his knee is no longer an issue.

"I personally would like to feel like it is less in the forefront of me doing my job," he said.

Votto also would like to play for Canada in the World Baseball Classic. A native of Toronto, he played in the 2009 Classic. He planned to talk to the team's medical staff and front office about it.

"Ultimately, it should be a group decision," Votto said. "I'd like to play. Certainly spring training is too long this year. Why not?"

Cardinals get going at spring camp with an 'edge'

Wire reports

Rain hampered the St. Louis Cardinals in their first full workout of spring training on Friday. It didn't dampen their enthusiasm.

Cardinals players joked in the clubhouse and discussed their goals for a World Series title while holding limited workouts in soggy South Florida. The team last year fell one game short of going to their second straight series.

"We had some guys come back with a serious edge," said second-year manager Mike Matheny, a longtime member of the organization. "It seems like this team is more motivated than they've ever been before."

The second consecutive day of rain forced hitters into covered batting cages instead of onto the fields and eliminated fielding practice. Though the rain had mostly subsided prior to the start of the mid-morning workouts, Matheny chose to take a cautious approach.

"I was ready to roll," he said. "We had a real nice schedule put out today. Our guys were going to feel it today."

Free agent signee Ronny Cedeno was the lone position player who didn't arrive in camp by Friday's reporting date. The Venezuelan is expected to fill a utility role for the Cardinals but is still trying to get his visa approved. Relief pitcher Carlos Martinez, a native of the Dominican Republic, is also trying to resolve a similar issue.

This is the second spring for Carlos Beltran in a Cardinals uniform. This time, he comes to Jupiter with a little more knowledge about what to expect.

When Beltran signed with the Cardinals before the start of last season, many wondered whether he could put up the kind of offensive numbers that would help offset the loss of Albert Pujols to free agency.

Matheny noted that it looked like Beltran was in better shape this spring, a year after hitting .269 with 32 homers and 97 RBIs.

"I'm more comfortable for sure," said Beltran, who arrived in Jupiter a couple days ago for what he estimated to be his 17th major league spring training. "I think last year when I came over I knew what I needed to do but it's kind of hard to adjust to a new clubhouse, sometimes."

Left fielder Matt Holliday hit for the first time this spring in Jupiter on Friday and said the nagging back problem that limited him in the playoffs isn't affecting him now. He wasn't too bothered by spending his first workout in the cage instead of on the fields.

■ Ryan Braun had already let it be known he was not taking any questions about his reported link to a Florida anti-aging clinic when he faced reporters outside the Milwaukee Brewers' spring training clubhouse on Friday.

Before anyone asked a question, the Brewers slugger repeated the restrictions he'd placed on his first spring meeting with the media.

"I understand why a lot of you guys are probably here but I made a statement last week," Braun said. "I stand behind that statement. I'm not going to address that issue any further. As I stated, I'm happy to cooperate fully into any investigation into this matter."

He did answer one drug-related question, regarding the recent announcement by Major League Baseball and the players union that players will be subject to in-season, unannounced testing for human growth hormone.

"I've always been supportive of the system," Braun said. "I've always been supportive of additional drug testing or whatever testing they have that's available."

Build bond with niece before discussing Facebook posts

Dear Amy: I have a niece who is 18. She and I are “friends” on Facebook. The other day on my news feed, a video she posted of a pornographic nature (nudity and sexual activity involving a male stripper) popped up. This is not the first time she has posted such things, but it is the worst. Another time she had a conversation with a male friend about “having his baby.” I am concerned for this girl, but not sure how to approach her. We live far away from each other. Her mother, who I was very close to, died recently. I am not as close to her father. Do you have any suggestions? I do not want to be “unfriended.”

— Worried Aunt

Dear Aunt: For now, you should not comment on these posts. You might gain some insight, however, by reading through the comments made by others. Other Facebook “friends” and contemporaries may comment, “Wow — that’s a little raw, don’t you think?” or question her taste or judgment. Facebook comments can sometimes lead a person to self-correct. I do not think it’s wise for you to comment publicly: “I find this highly offensive. Love you, Auntie” because, given your niece’s age and immaturity, she will likely be done with you quite quickly, and you want to keep the door open. If these posts worry (in addition to offend) you, you could send her a private message on Facebook to say, “Hi, I’m checking in. How are you doing lately?” Keep your own contact benign and open-ended. You want to learn what she’s thinking about — not just what she’s posting — and develop enough intimacy with her that you can eventually ask her to reflect on how she’s presenting herself online. Dear Amy: I am in a quandary about whether I should mind my own business about a situation in our neighborhood. A neighbor had a baby a year ago, announced with a banner on their front porch. We did not even know she was pregnant. They keep to themselves. That baby has never been seen by any of the neighbors, not even their next-door neighbor. They never bring her outside, and no one has seen the child (or the parents) in their yard. Other neighbors have had babies in the last three years, and they all play outside with one another. We have seen them take the baby out in the car maybe three or four times. Attempts by various neighbors to be friendly are quietly rebuffed at the door. I’m wondering whether to make a call to Children’s Protective Services to request a welfare check on the child.

Staying indoors 24/7 can’t be healthy for a baby. — Worried Neighbor Dear Worried: This child could have health (or other) problems causing the parents to keep the baby inside; you simply don’t know. You also don’t know what this family’s lifestyle or work schedule is. While I do not suggest being a busybody or necessarily judging choices parents make, our child welfare system is set up to be the advocate for children who cannot advocate for themselves. If you are truly worried about this baby’s health, safety and welfare, and if you have tried other ways and cannot determine whether the child is OK, then you should make the call.

Horoscope

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (Feb. 16). When you are around those you want to impress, you become positively radiant. So stock your life with admirable individuals. They will inspire you to grow. As a complementary partner, you will enjoy the perks of teamwork in March and April. You’ll earn an award or a contract in May. Invest in training in June. Virgo and Libra people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 20, 1, 24, 38 and 30. ARIES (March 21-April 19). You and your family share experiences and the same background, and yet it often feels like you’re not coming from the same place at all. It’s further proof that each person mentally makes up his or her own reality. TAURUS (April 20-May 20). It feels as though you are precariously perched on the balance beam of life. True, life can be dangerously risky. But you also can count on the solid support of those around you. You are safe. GEMINI (May 21-June 21). People will do silly things to impress you. What does it mean? It’s a sign that you are powerfully attractive, though you probably have no idea what to do with all of the attention. CANCER (June 22-July 22). Your pleasure and satisfaction are important, but they are not the most important factors now. Step back and consider the effect of your actions on the others around you. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). It’s strange how issues can become simultaneously clearer and more complex. Your philosophical mood mixes with the light of morning to make this happen. You won’t know what to do just yet. It’s better to wait until you’re sure. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). No good will come of psychological or actual grasping. All that’s beautiful, wholesome and true will alight on an open heart and palm of one who has already let go. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). The volume you choose will make a big difference in how your message is received. Gentle, quiet words can accomplish much as long as they are spoken with confidence. SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You are mighty persuasive even though your influence is hardly detectable. You show up knowing what you want. You are unwavering. The prize will eventually yield to your consistent and persistent will. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Your powers of empathy are strong. You really will experience the world from another person’s vantage. Then you will return to yourself with new understanding. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). There are those you like but don’t know very well. Knowing more wouldn’t necessarily lead to liking more. Attraction relies on mystery to a great degree now. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You may have a hidden agenda, but it’s not hidden for any negative reason. It’s just that you’re more powerful when people can’t tell what you want. Charm is stronger than coercion. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). When you know you have a strong influence over a situation, you back off so as not to come off as intimidating or pushy. The wise will interpret your gentle approach as a sign of power.

Receiving false-positive ANA test is very common

Dear Dr. Roach: I am a 61-year-old woman in good health. Earlier this year, I had a blood test for suspected Lyme disease (I did not have it), and one of the results in the blood test showed a positive ANA. My primary-care physician sent me to a rheumatologist, and it was explained to me that my result is a possible sign of scleroderma or perhaps lupus. I have no symptoms of any of these diseases, and have no joint or skin problems. The rheumatologist ordered some additional blood tests, and nothing else remarkable showed up. Should I be concerned?

— W.T.

Dear W.T.: The ANA test is a test for anti-nuclear antibodies, which are common in autoimmune disorders, like the scleroderma and lupus you mentioned. However, a false-positive ANA test is very common. At least 5 percent of healthy people will have a positive ANA at any given time, and as we get older, that number goes higher, as high as 30 percent. Since you took the test to look for Lyme disease and not because of suspicion of an auto immune disease, it is even more likely that this is a false positive. Sometimes ANA tests turn positive months or years before symptoms of lupus or other autoimmune diseases start, but I think it is much more likely that this is not something to worry about. Dear Dr. Roach: My mother was diagnosed with rapidly progressive dementia (likely Alzheimer’s disease) at 75 years of age. She was a moderate drinker throughout much of her adult life, consuming two drinks per night. Do you think her alcohol consumption contributed to her diagnosis? Would you suggest I abstain from alcohol? I have had conflicting opinions from health care professionals. I am a social drinker, but I sometimes wonder if I am taking an unnecessary risk. Dear L.R.: Alzheimer’s disease usually is a slowly progressive form of dementia — rapid progression is not common with Alzheimer’s. Excess alcohol use is certainly a cause of dementia, and it is possible that the two combined to cause a more rapid progression. But how much is too much? For women, more than one drink a day is not healthy, and a mixed drink can contain a lot of alcohol, depending on who is mixing it. I recommend for all women to keep to no more than one drink per day (two for men). That level is very unlikely to cause any adverse effects on the brain long term.

Try these hints to make spring cleaning chores effortless

Dear Readers: Who really likes cleaning especially the deep cleaning that we all need to do once in a while? To make it a little easier, let’s start the planning process. Read on for some Heloise Hints on making upcoming spring cleaning easier:

- Get everyone involved. Select a date when everyone is available, then make a list and assign a cleaning task to each family member. Remember that even small children can do small things.

- Set out a box for items to be donated or saved for a garage sale.
- Get cleaning products together. Put them in a cleaning-supply carrier or plastic tub to easily take from room to room. Vinegar is always in my carrier! It is my favorite cleaner and can be used on just about everything. Vinegar is a cheap alternative to expensive cleaners. Every household should have a bottle or two of vinegar on hand. I have a pamphlet that includes many of my money-saving uses for vinegar. To receive a copy, send $5 and a long, self-addressed, stamped (66 cents) envelope to: Heloise/Vinegar, P.O. Box 795001, San Antonio, TX 78279-5001. This pamphlet will save you from the get-go, because you won’t have to buy other cleaners. Always read label directions on all other cleaners. DON’T let kids handle the strong stuff.

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: A recent hint told about using a golf ball to massage shoulders, or having someone use the golf ball to massage your back. Another suggestion is to take one or two golf balls or a tennis ball, put them in a sock and tie the end of the sock into a knot. You can massage your back or shoulders on your own by holding on to each end of the sock and “rolling” the sock across the affected areas.

Benedict XVI offered hints of his plans

By Terry Mattingly
Scripps Howard News Service

In the spring of 2009, Pope Benedict XVI stopped in Aquila, Italy, to pray at the shrine of St. Celestine V.

The pope left his pallium — a wool garment that resembles a yoke, symbolizing bonds between a shepherd and his flock — on this medieval pope's tomb. Then, 15 months later, he visited a cathedral outside Rome to pray before the relics, once again, of St. Celestine V.

Few noticed Benedict's actions. So who was this saint? He was the elderly priest who, "somewhat against his will," was elected pope in 1294, observed theologian Scott Hahn of Franciscan University of Steubenville, Ohio. Before long, Pope Celestine V issued a decree allowing occupants of St. Peter's throne to step down — a step he then proceeded to take.

Looking back, it appears Benedict's visit to shrines honoring this particular pope were "probably more than pious acts," noted Hahn, on his Facebook page. "More likely, they were profound and symbolic gestures of a very personal nature, which conveyed a message that a pope can hardly deliver any other way."

This was a message consistent with the 86-year-old pope's stunning announcement this week — days before the start of Lent — that he would end his eight-year papacy on Feb. 28. Although it has been seven centuries since the voluntary resignation of a pope, this option remains in canon law and was affirmed by Pope Paul VI in 1975 and the Pope John Paul II in 1996.

Benedict said he was thinking about the future of the papacy, not the past: "In today's world, subject to so many rapid changes and shaken by questions of deep relevance for the life of faith, in order to govern the bark of Saint Peter and proclaim the Gospel, both strength of mind and body are necessary, strength which in the last few months has deteriorated in me to the extent that I have had to recognize my incapacity to adequately fulfill the ministry entrusted to me."

The Vatican Press Office noted that these words were consistent with his thoughts in the 2010 book, "Light of the World." While it would be wrong to flee in times of trouble, Benedict said: "When a pope realizes clearly that he is no longer physically, mentally and spiritually capable of carrying out his role, then there is legally the possibility, and also the obligation, to resign."

Vatican leaders are planning for the election of a pope by Easter, thus creating a whirlwind of activity. Reactions, so far, have included:

■ Comedy Central's Stephen Colbert — an active Catholic — quipped that "popes don't quit. God has a way of telling popes when it's time to retire. It's called death."

The Rev. James Martin, a Jesuit known as "The Colbert Report" chaplain, later tweeted that he should have told the comedian, "Pope Benedict XVI is raising the bar when it comes to giving things up for Lent."

■ On the far doctrinal left, Catholics United said: "The Catholic church hierarchy has been seen as an institution overly focused on issues of human sexuality, such as opposition to access to birth control and marriage equality. ... The next pope has a unique opportunity to radically shift the agenda of the church."

Don't risk eternity by not being prepared for Christ's return

EDITOR'S NOTE: This column first appeared in The Gleaner on March 18, 2006.

We never know where life is going to lead us. On the road of life we have to be prepared for detours.

One day we may be on a road of ease and good traveling, and the next day we may find ourselves on one that is bumpy and has many curves.

This is the reason we should be ready for whatever life may bring. We do not know from one day to the next what kind of road we may have to journey.

This is what our Lord was teaching in His parable of the 10 virgins as it is recorded in Matthew 25:1-13. In this story, our Lord told of 10 brides who went out to meet their future husbands.

Five of the 10 went out prepared, while the other five did not bother to be ready for whatever challenges they might face. They probably thought that everything would be OK, so they did not trouble themselves with taking extra oil for their lamps.

Verses 3 and 4 say, "They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them: But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

It stands to reason that a lamp is no good without oil to fuel the light.

The five women who did not take extra oil for their lamps were only concerned with their immediate needs and desires.

The scriptures tell us that while the brides waited for their grooms, they slept. At midnight, their husbands came. The Lord said, "At midnight there was a great cry made, 'Behold the bridegroom comes, go ye out to meet him'" (Verse 6).

But about the time the grooms came unto them, the five foolish virgins had used up all of their oil.

With all of their oil gone, they were in the dark. They went to the other five who had brought extra oil to borrow some, but to no avail.

The five wise virgins said to them, "Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go unto them that sell and buy for yourselves" (Matt. 25:9).

While they were gone to buy oil for their lamps, their husbands came. Those who were ready, wedded their bridegrooms. The others missed their chance because they had gone out to purchase fuel to burn in their lamps.

The Bible says at the end of Verse 10, ... "and the doors were shut." What a tragedy! They were left out in the cold.

What is the Lord trying to convey to us in this story? The Lord sums it all up in Verse 13 when He says, "Watch therefore, for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

When you talk about the coming of the Lord, some people don't take you seriously.

They think you are way out in left field somewhere, but we cannot let them deter us from the truth of God. The word of God is going to stand when all else is gone.

Are you prepared to meet the Lord if He should make His appearance today? You can be by accepting Christ into your heart and life as Savior. When you do this, you can look forward to this time with great anticipation and hope and not with dread and terror.

Which company are you in today? Are you with those who are too busy with the cares of this present life to make preparations for the next?

I pray that you will take time to think about this parable of the 10 virgins and the application it has to us and our lives.

Until next week — God bless.

Bible with players' signatures ends up in library bin

By Richard Chang
Sacramento Bee

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Joanne Murphy knew something was unusual when she opened up the old Bible. The holy book turned up among the tens of thousands of materials donated to the Friends of the Sacramento Public Library each year.

Inside the Bible, 31 different signatures were emblazoned on the first page along with “Pirates 1953” written across the top in blue ink.

Murphy, an antiquarian book repairer, didn't know what all this meant until she did some research online.

“The Bible had been sitting in my shop for months waiting to get repaired,” said Murphy, 65. “No one wanted it.”

As it turns out, she had a piece of baseball history. The Catholic Bible was signed by 30 players and manager Fred Haney of the 1953 Pittsburgh Pirates and given to their general manager Branch Rickey, best known for breaking Major League Baseball's color barrier by signing Jackie Robinson.

But the question remains: how did Rickey's Bible end up in a donation bin for a Sacramento library group last month?

The person most likely to know, Rickey's grandson Branch Barrett Rickey, said it's a mystery.

“It's the first I've heard of the Bible,” Branch B. Rickey said by phone from Texas.

Branch Rickey, who was posthumously inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame, died in 1965. About a dozen of the 30 Pirates players, including Hall of Fame member Ralph Kiner and broadcaster Joe Garagiola, are still living. But of the five reached by The Bee, none recalled signing the Bible.

“I don't remember signing it, but maybe I did,” said Eddy Fitz Gerald, a former catcher who lives in Folsom.

But Fitz Gerald, 88, did remember the team's record. “It wasn't a very good team,” he said.

The Pirates finished in last place in the eight-team National League that year with a 50-104 record.

Branch B. Rickey, president of the Pacific Coast League, said a number of his relatives live in California, including a sister in Davis and a cousin in Sacramento. But both said they didn't know about the Bible.

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

This Bible, seen here at the Book Den in Sacramento, Calif., was autographed by the members of the 1953 Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team.

“Much of the stuff from my grandfather was parceled out among five daughters and a daughter-in-law,” Branch B. Rickey said. “The division of who got what was very informal.”

Branch B. Rickey said it was possible his grandfather had “given the Bible as a gift to a dear friend,” but acknowledged, “there's any number of speculations.”

Christopher Jakle, grandson of Rickey who lives in Sacramento, said he, too, doesn't know how the Bible ended up here, but noted that a number of the family's belongings had previously sold on eBay.

Jakle believes the buyer probably died and whoever inherited the Bible didn't know about its significance.

“I would be interested in buying it back,” Jakle said Friday, while viewing the Bible.

Branch Rickey — better known for his front-office roles with the St. Louis Cardinals and the Brooklyn Dodgers — did have a number of connections to Sacramento early in his career, according to local baseball historian Alan O'Connor. Rickey purchased the Sacramento Solons — the precursor to the River Cats — in 1935.

“He was on Riverside and Broadway all the time, watching players and talking to people,” O'Connor said.

But arguably the most polarizing part of his career was when Rickey signed Robinson in 1945. Two years later, Robinson debuted with the Dodgers, the first step in ending racial segregation in Major League Baseball. “All his peers opposed him, every one of them,” Branch B. Rickey said. “But he had a conviction to do this.”

Still, Branch B. Rickey said his grandfather never took credit for signing Robinson.

“Robinson didn't just break the barrier — he shattered it. He went from excluded to excellent,” Branch B. Rickey said.

A movie based on Robinson's life, “42,” is scheduled to be released in April, with Harrison Ford playing Branch Rickey and Chadwick Boseman portraying Robinson.

Bible tells us that hell not just made-up place

Dear Rev. Graham: I think hell is just a myth. It's just an idea that various religions dreamed up in order to scare people into following their beliefs. I assume you don't agree, but I challenge you to prove that you're right and I'm wrong.

— W.N.

Dear W.N.: Let me ask you a question: If you went to the airport and were told there was a 10 percent chance your flight was going to crash, would you get on board? No, of course not. It would be too great a gamble to risk taking that flight.

And yet that's exactly what you're doing with your soul. What if there is only a 10 percent chance that you're wrong, and that hell actually does exist? (I'll get to hell's reality in a moment.)

Why gamble with your soul — which is exactly what you're doing? After all, you can't prove that hell doesn't exist; you only hope it doesn't.

But hell does exist; it isn't just something religious people dreamed up. I know it because Jesus warned us about it — and Jesus spoke with the full authority of God Himself.

He called hell a place of “darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth” (Matthew 25:30).

As I've often said, not one word in the Bible about hell would ever make you want to go there.

My real question for you, however, is this: Why do you reject hell — and God and Jesus?

The reason, I suspect, is because you want to run your own life. But that's a dead-end road, and I urge you to stop and reconsider. God loves you, and Christ died for you.

Don't gamble with your eternal soul, but repent of your sins and give your life to Christ without delay. You'll never regret it — never.

“BEING PREPARED”

A few days ago a storm for the record books hit the northeast. Some complained to their local officials that there was not enough done to prepare for this storm.

Some officials were quick to point out you can only prepare so much for a storm of this magnitude. One of the things we still can't control are the forces of nature. We are better informed about upcoming events like this than ever before but there is still only so much we can do. It seems that the biggest problem is that people just don't want to be inconvenienced. They were told to stay off the roads, to prepare for the blizzard and guess what-many just ignored the warnings. It reminds me of how people treat the warnings of God. One of God's great prophets in the Old Testament was Jeremiah and for 40 years he warned Judah of coming doom if they did not repent. They rejected God's message and were taken into captivity by the Babylonians. The New Testament provides mankind with ample warnings of the coming judgment of God but so few seem to be concerned! “The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness...” (2 Peter 3:9-11). If we aren't prepared there will be no one to blame but ourselves.

Associated Press

HIALEAH, Fla. — Somewhere on the streets of Havana is a cherry-red Lada car rebuilt almost entirely with parts that arrived from Miami in a visitor's suitcases.

A year ago, the 20-year-old Russian-made automobile — a boxy but remarkably durable model — was in dire need of repair. The door handles were rusting, the tires on their last mile, the inner workings shot.

"It was in very bad condition," said Frank Torres, a Cuban-American living in Miami whose cousin owns the car back in Cuba.

Torres decided to help overhaul it. But he and his cousin either couldn't find the parts they needed in Cuba or encountered exorbitant prices.

So Torres turned to a Russian auto parts store that recently opened in Hialeah, in a pocket of Miami-Dade County filled with cheap clothing stores and gas stations that sell freshly brewed cafe con leche.

There, businessman Fabian Zakharov is tapping into a niche market: Cuban-Americans, mostly recent arrivals in this country, who frequently go back to visit relatives on the island and bring food, toiletries and car parts.

In more than a year since the store opened, Zakharov said, he has sold parts for hundreds of Ladas and some Moskvich cars, the two Soviet-era vehicles that are mainstays on Cuban roads. Despite the U.S. trade embargo that has been in place against the communist island since the early 1960s, what Zakharov and his customers are doing is legal and aboveboard. He is not exporting to Cuba; he is selling to customers in the U.S. like any other business. Those customers can send or take products to Cuba, subject to certain limits.

It's one more example of the growing economic links between the United States and Cuba, political adversaries still intricately connected by those who left and those who stayed.

The average Cuban worker is paid about $20 a month, making buying a new car impossible for most. Because of that and the trade restrictions, the streets of Havana are an automotive time capsule, filled with bulbous, tail-finned Detroit models from the pre-revolution 1950s and dowdy vehicles from the Cold War.

"This store is wonderful," said Alexis Reyes, a Cuban who has been living in Miami for two years and recently bought a part for a 30-year-old Russian car his son drives back on the island. "It means those of us living here can buy the parts to maintain the cars of our family in Cuba."

Ladas began arriving in Cuba in the 1970s, when the country was closely allied with the Soviet Union. Many were doled out strategically to doctors, diplomats, and sugarcane cutters who met production targets. Cubans who served on overseas missions and came back with hard currency were often allowed to buy them.

While they are slowly being supplanted by Chinese and South Korean models, Ladas are now commonly used as police cars, taxis, government and military vehicles, and family cars.

Zakharov, who was born in Russia but grew up on the island, said the idea for the auto parts business occurred to him when a friend in Cuba needed help finding an original Lada brake pump. The only place Zakharov could locate one was Russia.

Torres bought about 80 percent of the new parts in his cousin's car from Zakharov's shop. He took most of the parts in suitcases on four trips to Cuba, paying a $1-per-pound fee.

The once-decrepit blue Lada is now shiny red.

"He had an old car," Torres said. "And now he has a new one."

Fed munition buy for training, not takeover

Homeland Security eyes ammo

By Alicia A. Caldwell
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Online rumors about a big government munitions purchase are true, sort of.

The Homeland Security Department wants to buy more than 1.6 billion rounds of ammunition in the next four or five years. It says it needs them — roughly the equivalent of five bullets for every person in the United States — for law enforcement agents in training and on duty.

Published federal notices about the ammo buy have agitated conspiracy theorists since the fall. That's when conservative radio host Alex Jones spoke of an "arms race against the American people" and said the government was "gearing up for total collapse, they're gearing up for huge wars."

The government's explanation is much less sinister.

Federal solicitations to buy the bullets are known as "strategic sourcing contracts," which help the government get a low price for a big purchase, says Peggy Dixon, spokeswoman for the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in Glynco, Ga. The training center and others like it run by the Homeland Security Department use as many as 15 million rounds every year, mostly on shooting ranges and in training exercises.

Dixon said one of the contracts would allow Homeland Security to buy up to 750 million rounds of ammunition over the next five years for its training facilities. The rounds are used for basic and advanced law enforcement training for federal law enforcement agencies under the department's umbrella. The facilities also offer firearms training to tens of thousands of federal law enforcement officers. More than 90 federal agencies and 70,000 agents and officers used the department's training center last year.

The rest of the 1.6 billion rounds of ammunition would be purchased by Immigration and Customs Enforcement, the federal government's second largest criminal investigative agency. ICE's ammunition requests in the last year included:

- 450 million rounds of .40-caliber duty ammunition;
- 40 million rounds of rifle ammunition a year for as many as five years, for a total bullet-buy of 200 million rounds;
- 176,000 rifle rounds on a separate contract;
- 25,000 blank rounds.

The Homeland Security ammo buy is not the first time the government's bullets purchases have sparked concerns on the Internet. The same thing happened last year when the Social Security Administration posted a notice that it was buying 174,000 hollow point bullets.

Jonathan L. Lasher, the agency's assistant inspector general for external relations, said those bullets were for the Social Security inspector general's office.

Jones the talk-show host did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY:

“THE SADDEST CHAPTER”

One may wonder at the chaos, turmoil, anxiety, and evil of this world and conclude it has always been like this. The first book of the Bible gives us a wonderful accounting of creation. By the end of the 6 days of creation the sun was shining, the fields and forests are filled with life, man and woman have been created and placed in a beautiful garden home and God is pleased with His work. What could go wrong? How did the world go from pristine glory to evil and corruption? Genesis 3 is the answer. Satan enters the Garden and tempts Eve to disobey God (Vs. 1). Thus when sin entered the world it brought with it all of its evil fruits (shame, sickness, disappointment, death, separation from God, fear, struggles, doubts and all other things that mar the beauty God intended for this earth). “For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now” (Romans 8:22). Paul had earlier in this same chapter described the only way we can find hope in a world of desperation and separation. “There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit” (Vs.1). Two chapters earlier Paul describes how one gets into Christ (Romans 6:3) “Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?” One can never be rich enough or smart enough to overcome all the heartaches of life but “in Christ” we can certainly have the hope of a better home to come where there will be no corruption. We can either remain on the sad side of life or choose to live for the Lord who gives us hope in spite of the ruin caused by sin.

ORDINANCE NO. 02-13
ORDINANCE CLOSING PORTION OF PUBLIC RIGHT-OF-WAY

SUMMARY: AN ORDINANCE CLOSING PORTION OF PUBLIC RIGHT-OF-WAY WHICH IS AN UNIMPROVED ALLEYWAY LOCATED IN THE CITY OF HENDERSON AND RUNNING THROUGH PROPERTY ADDRESSED AS 335 HWY. 41 SOUTH (REVISED OUTLOT #1-BLOCK #3) OF THE LAKELAND SUBDIVISION

WHEREAS, Arnold Engineering Services, Inc. on behalf of client, Susan Cox Development, LLC, has petitioned the City of Henderson for the closing of a certain public right-of-way which is an unimproved alleyway located in the City of Henderson and running through property addressed as 335 Hwy. 41 South (Revised Outlot #1-Block #3) of the Lakeland Subdivision, and more specifically shown by plat marked Exhibit "A"-#1, which is attached hereto and made a part hereof by reference.

WHEREAS, it appears that the best interest of the residents of Henderson, Kentucky would be served by the closing of said public right-of-way; and

WHEREAS, it appears that the closing of said right-of-way would enhance the value of the property affected thereby and would not create a hardship on any of the adjoining property owners or other persons with any interest therein; and

WHEREAS, under KRS 82.405(2), the Board of Commissioners of the City of Henderson, Kentucky, makes the following findings of fact:

(a) that the identity of all property owners in or abutting the above referred to public right-of-way or portions thereof to be closed has been made;

(b) that the requirement contained in KRS 82.405 (2) (b) that written notice of the proposed closing has been given to all property owners in or abutting the public right-of-way or any portion thereof of being closed;

(c) that Susan Cox Development, LLC, Ron Pritzkau, Parker Rental Properties, LLC and Palmer Oil Company are the owners of properties adjoining the public way or portion thereof being closed and have given their written notarized consents to the closing, and a notarized copy of such consents which contain a description of the public way to be closed are attached hereto and made a part hereof, collectively marked Exhibit "A".

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT ORDAINED by the City of Henderson, Kentucky, that under the provisions of KRS 82.405, as amended, relating to the closing of public ways, the right-of-way being an unimproved alleyway located in the City of Henderson and running through property addressed as 335 Hwy. 41 South (Revised Outlot #1-Block #3) of the Lakeland Subdivision, is hereby closed and more specifically shown by plat marked Exhibit "A"-#1, which is attached hereto and made a part hereof by reference.

All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict herewith are hereby repealed and superseded to the extent of such conflict.

This ordinance shall become effective upon its legal adoption.

Notice of Intention to Mine

Pursuant to Application
Number 851-5009,
Amendment 1

In accordance with KRS 350.070, notice is hereby given that Corydon Resources LLC, 12312 Olive Boulevard, Suite 449, St. Louis, MO 63141 has filed for an amendment to an existing underground coal mining operation located adjacent to Corydon in Henderson County. The amendment will add 9.3 acres of surface disturbance and will overlie existing permitted underground acres making a total area of 15,800.9 acres within the permit boundary.

The proposed amendment is approximately 0.2 miles north-east of US 60's junction with KY 1557, and located 0.7 miles southwest of US 60's junction with KY145.

The proposed major amendment is located on the Poole U.S.G.S. 7.5 minute quadrangle map. The surface area to be affected by the amendment is owned by Corydon Resources LLC.

The operation will affect area within 100 feet of public road US 60. The operation will not involve relocation or closure of any public road.

The amendment proposes to construct surface facilities for the underground mine including a shaft and fan ventilation facility.

The amendment application has been filed for public inspection at the Department for Natural Resources, Madisonville Division of Mine Reclamation and Enforcement, Third Floor, 625 Hospital Drive, Madisonville, KY 42431. Written comments, objections or requests for a permit conference must be filed with the Director, Division of Mine Permits, #2 Hudson Hollow Complex, Highway 127 South, Frankfort, KY 40601.

Movie: The Lucky One

The romantic-tragic approach of novelist Nicholas Sparks ("The Notebook") services Zac Efron reasonably well in this 2012 drama about a Marine who believes his life was saved during Iraq combat by his locating a photo of a woman (Taylor Schilling). When he returns to America, he heads to Louisiana to find her — but her fears from the past may prevent them from having future happiness. Director Scott Hicks' ("Shine") cast also includes Blythe Danner.

Movie: Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets

A mysterious force threatens Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry in the totally captivating second movie adapted from J.K. Rowling's novels. Harry, Ron and Hermione (Daniel Radcliffe, Rupert Grint, Emma Watson) must find out what is causing people known as Mudbloods to become petrified; otherwise, the school will be closed. Robbie Coltrane, Kenneth Branagh and Richard Harris co-star in this 2002 tale.

Person of Interest

Reese (Jim Caviezel) becomes trapped with his Person of Interest (Amy Acker), a psychologist in danger from one of her patients, in the most heavily surveilled part of the city. He must rely on Finch, Carter and Fusco (Michael Emerson, Taraji P. Henson, Kevin Chapman) to help him fend off the FBI, corrupt cops and a bevy of old foes in "Firewall."

NASCAR Racing

A sure sign of spring is the smell of race-car exhaust in the air, as provided by the first NASCAR preseason race of the year, The Sprint Unlimited, from Florida's Daytona International Speedway. The field taking to the venerable 2.5-mile oval includes 2012 pole winners and past victors of the Budweiser Shootout — this race's moniker until the beer maker pulled its sponsorship this year.

7:30 p.m. on D
NBA Basketball

The NBA's annual celebration of all things basketball begins tonight in Houston's Toyota Center with its brightest young talent competing in the BBVA Rising Stars Challenge. All-Star Saturday Night takes on a team format this year with the East and West competing in the skills competitions for charity. Then tomorrow, the NBA's best players voted to the All-Star Game put on a show to wrap things up. The West beat the East 152-149 in last year's game in Orlando.

8 p.m. on D
Beyoncé: Life Is but a Dream

The multiple Grammy-winning singer has always been a private person, but she shares her personal life on her own terms in this new self-produced documentary. She speaks candidly about her relationship with Jay-Z, issues with her family of origin and the joys of motherhood. The film also includes plenty of performance footage, but it's the private moments that are the most compelling.

Stories from the Road to Freedom

Rare recordings, photos and film footage document the lives of ordinary African-Americans from the Emancipation Proclamation through the civil rights movement in this new special. Highlights include audio of World War I veteran Edward Nichols, who witnessed the Red Summer riots of 1919; film of Ernest Beane, who documented his life as a Pullman porter; and the earliest known footage of a Juneteenth celebration from 1900.

9:30 p.m. on A
Movie: Beneath the Planet of the Apes

Picking up exactly where the original film ended, this 1970 science-fiction sequel — the first of four — sends astronaut Brent (James Franciscus) in search of Taylor (Charlton Heston), the space traveler who crashed through a time warp and landed on a planet ruled by simians. Helped by the mute Nova (Linda Harrison), Brent locates Taylor, as well as an atomic-bomb-worshipping cult of underground mutants.

9:30 p.m. on B
Movie: How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days

A Doris Day-type romantic comedy, this light but entertaining 2003 movie casts Kate Hudson as a magazine reporter doing a story on luring — then getting dumped by — a beau in 10 days. She attracts an advertising executive (Matthew McConaughey) who has just bet he can woo a woman into falling in love with him within the same time frame.

10 p.m. on D
Bones

A corpse is a corpse, of course, of course. The discovery of a body with its feet gone leads Brennan and Booth (Emily Deschanel, David Boreanaz) into a bizarre subculture where people play horse and rider for, um, adult entertainment.

10:15 p.m. on B
Movie: The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo

Rooney Mara earned an Oscar nomination for her striking transformation in cinema's second run at the Stieg Larsson best-seller, about a decidedly unconventional computer hacker who helps a disgraced reporter (Daniel Craig) probe a years-ago disappearance.

AUCTION BOUND

Our policy is to keep our pre-owned inventory here no longer than 45 days (what we refer to in the industry as "fresh"). After 45 days, we tag the vehicle for transport to auction.

FAQs:

Is there anything wrong with the vehicle?

Please understand that before any vehicle is placed on our lot it is thoroughly inspected and reconditioned.
*(excludes vehicles marked "as is")

Why didn't the vehicle sell earlier?

Several scenarios may come into play - we may have several of the same make/model/ and color on our lot at the same time. Also, quite frankly, as much as we advertise, sometimes a person may not think to look here for a pre-owned Jeep or Mustang, etc.

What's the catch?

Nothing, our "fresh lot" policy is your gain. So, take a look at our "Auction Bound" inventory. You may find your next great vehicle here!
